Blair ready for conference backlash

Unions warn Labour over severing links

By JILL SHERMAN AND PHILIP BASSETT

TRADE union leaders said yesterday that the Labour leadership would be committing political suicide if it went ahead with plans to sever the party's links with the unions.

Tony Blair is now bracing himself for a backlash at the party conference this month when trade unions may seek revenge for his repeated attempts to undermine them. John Monks, the TUC General Secretary and an ally of Mr Blair delivered his second attack on the leadership this week when he said the conference in Blackpool had been dominated by confusion not clarity" and demanded a "sur-er touch" from Labour. Mr Monks is said to be furious that Mr Blair's plans to curb union power had overshadowed the TUC conference. But union leaders reserved their sharpest attacks for Stephen Byers, the Shadow Employment Minister, who identified himself as the source of the reports in several newspapers, including The Times, that Labour would break the union link.

John Edmonds, General Secretary of the GMB workers' union, called on the Labour leader to move Mr Byers from his post as industrial affairs spokesman after the shadow minister discussed the issue with journalists over a dinner in Blackpool on Wednesday. "Stephen Byers should carry a black box

Mr Byers had damaged his credibility with Labour and the unions, he added. "After a decent time, it would be wise to consider that he be moved Yesterday the Labour leadership tried to distance Mr Blair from the reports, saying that no such plans were being drawn up by him. Mr Byers said that the journalists' version of the events would win the "Booker prize for fiction". But the four journalists, from The Times, The Daily Telegraph, the Daily Mirror and the Daily Express stood by their story. In interviews later, Mr Byers conceded that the historic links with the unions which founded the Labour Party in 1900 could be severed within five years.

The Tories immediately capitalised on the confusion, saying that Mr Byers held the briefing "in a shameless attempt to win votes from Middle England." John Major said that Labour seemed to be in an almost daily state of confusion. "What seems to be happening is their spin doctors have whispered something in private and when it becomes public, it is denied by the leadership." Lew Adams, General Secretary of train drivers' union, Aslef, said that Labour would be committing political suicide if it cut the union link. "We are not looking for confrontation with any government," he said. "I am fed up to the teeth with the way in which this TUC conference has been persistently hijacked by the politicians. These statements seem designed to achieve some form of popularism with the voters by kicking the trade

Publicly, union leaders accepted the firm disavowal of the reports by Tony Blair's office, but privately many remain suspicious that the reports do indicate the direction of Labour's thinking about the trade unions.

Nazi gold outcry drives Swiss to suspend banking secrecy

By MICHAEL BINYON DIPLOMATIC EDITOR

THE Swiss Government, stung by the furore over Nazi gold held in Swiss bank vaults, is to publish a decree on Monday ordering all bank records and accounts of all wartime financial dealings with the Nazis to be turned over to a special investigating committee.

Anyone who destroys any document to prevent its publication will be sent to jail or fined up to SFr50,000 (about £28,000). The draft decree obtained yesterday by The Times shows that the Swiss Government has decided that the controveris now so embarrassing sy is now so embarrassume that the issue must be cleared up once and for all. The investigators will be given blanket powers to inspect all bank records, historical documents and other relevant archives. Banking secrecy, a pillar of the Swiss banking system, will be suspended until the investigators have

The law will be confirmed by a referendum. The investiators will examine not only the German Reichsbank's sale of gold, but also the extent and fate of assets transferred to banks, insurance companies. lawyers, notaries, fiduciaries. asset managers or other individuals or groups based in Switzerland. This includes all money for deposit, investment or transfer to third parties and all assets received by the Swiss National Bank.

The investigators, whose possible, are also empowered to look at any money that belonged to the victims of Nazi rule, including those whose fate is uncertain and those who perished in the Holocaust. The experts will attempt to find out what happened to the assets that have not been recovered by legitimate claimants.

The draft says that the scope of the investigation will also cover all those who, as a consequence of racial laws or other discriminatory measures in the German Reich, had their property taken from them. And it will look at money coming from the Nazis themselves, much of which was believed to have been hurriedly deposited in Swiss Continued on page 2, col 3

NHS trust for aged may fail after losing £17m contracts

By JEREMY LAURANCE HEALTH CORRESPONDENT

AN NHS trust is facing bankruptcy after two health authorities announced they would no longer buy its services.

Anglian Harbours NHS Trust, based in Great Yarmouth, faces the loss of two thirds of its £26 million annual income after the East Norfolk and Suffolk health authorities said they planned to withdraw contracts worth over E17 million. The authorities said management costs were too high at the trust which provides community services for the elderly and mentally ill.

If it is forced out of business. Anglian Harbours would be the first NHS trust to fail. However, it is more likely to merge with a neighbouring trust, as has happened in the past when trusts have run into financial difficulties. In a statement, the health authorities said the trust had difficulty recruiting consultant psychiatrists and experienced clinicians because of its small size. Switching the contracts to neighbouring trusts would save a potential £1 million in management costs. David White, chief executive of Suffolk health authority, said: "This is a serious step not undertaken lightiy. But the interests of local people are paramount'

Anglian Harbours has already lost its mental health contracts, worth £8.4 million, which is to be switched next April. The further contracts, to be withdrawn next August, are worth another £9 million. George Doran, chief executive of Anglian Harbours said: "I suppose losing that level of income would tend to imply that we are going out of business but that is for the trust board to decide, as and when it happens." He said he had no prior warning of the decision and disputed the need for it. The trust board had asked both authorities to justify their actions.

A health department spokesman said the matter was one for the health authorities and the trust to sort out locally. Asked if the Government would allow the trust to go bankrupt, he said: hasn't happened before."

Driving bans may soon apply in all EU states

AND STEWART TENDLER

DRIVERS disqualified in one European Union country would be banned in all 15 member states under plans being studied by ministers and officials.

The scheme was set out in a draft convention by the Italians during their presidency of the EU earlier this year. It could become law by 1998.

The scheme would also stop motorists who are banned from driving in their home country applying for a licence in another member state, without necessarily having to inform that country's authorities of their status. Banned Germans, for example, have exploited the system by applying for licences in Britain.

The K4 committee of interior ministry officials is now looking at the convention. It would mainly ensure that information about driving bans was passed to other countries. It would be up to the countries to ensure that the ban was enforced

Most member states strongly support the principle of recognising driving bans and the subject has raised passions, especially in the northern states which have the strictest driving laws. The idea has been on the table for eight years already and introducing the scheme could take considerable negotiations but the idea has the blessing of MEPs impossible that it will pass, but it is and many international motoring agencies, including the AA and the

Yesterday the Department of Transport said any scheme would have to overcome legal differences between countries and different standards for disqualification. Britain. for example, has a different level of disqualification for drink-driving than some other EU countries. A spokesman for the Home Office said the scheme might be limited to particular types of offence.

A Commission spokeswoman said that the convention was still blocked by a series of objections by member states. She said: "It is not absolutely stuck for the time being."

Mutual recognition of disqualification has always run into member states' resistance to aligning national legislation on driving offences. They jealously guard their sovereignty over judicial affairs. Once broad agreement is found, an accord would have to be passed by the Council of Ministers. This could happen next

The European Parliament called for broad action on harmonising driving penalties earlier this month. The Brussels Commission effectively ruled this out because of the difficulty of pulling penal codes into line across the union. The Parliament also voted

"We think it's a point of principle." Mark Watts, a British Labour MEP said after the first-reading amendment. These people are driving a dangerous weapon. We cannot afford to give them the benefit of the doubt

Neil Kinnock, the Transport Commissioner, said the Commission could not support the Parliament's call for a universal penalty points system because it was legally

This effectively scuppered the parliamentary measure because Commission backing is required for an amendment to pass.

fore the collapse in 1945. The decree is phrased in as broad a way as possible to include every aspect of the National Socialist state — "its institutions or representatives, as well as physical or legal persons closely connected with it, including all financial transactions which were carried out with these assets".

The aim clearly is to end the rumours which still circulate that well-placed fugitive Nazis were able to recover much of these ill-gotten gains from Swiss bank accounts after the war. It has even been argued - though briskly dismissed by the British Government and most historians — that Martin Bormann, the executor of Hitler's will, survived after escaping from the bunker and withdrew huge sums of Nazi gold under his own legal signature.

The law specifically empow ers the investigators to look at the measures taken by Switzerland since 1945, including the controversial refusal by Swiss negotiators at first even to admit to the Allies that they held any gold bought from the

If the experts make any new discovery or turn up previously unknown evidence of gold deposits, they will be authorised to change the scope of their investigation in the light of their findings. Privately, many bankers and Swiss officials say that it is unlikely they will find much that is new, especially as many of the key figures in the postwar negotiations are now dead.

The investigating team, still to be nominated, will be drawn by the Berne federal Government from a variety of fields. The British Government welcomed the move by the Swiss, saying that it would help to clear up the mystery of how the gold came to be stored

Tories attack 'insensitive' EU threat on beef imports

IN BRUSSELS

A THREAT to put Britain in the dock of the European Court for restricting cattle imports from the Continent was described as "extraordinarily insensitive" last night by John Major.

Franz Fischler, the Farm Commissioner, is to warn Britain that it is breaking EU law by blocking the import of foreign cattle less than 30 months old. Yet Britain imposed the ban as part of its curbs on BSE, to accompany the slaughter of domestic cattle over 30 months.

British officials say that administering the cull would be impossible without a parallel ban on imports. The Prime Minister said: "We have made a decision that people will not eat beef over 30 months old in this country on health grounds. I would think it is extraordinarily insensitive if that is the way that our colleagues in Europe behave.

An EU spokesman said that the warning to Britain which could be followed by proceedings at the European Court of Justice - will also be Spain and other EU states which have introduced restrictions seen as a breach of the single market.

France and Spain have bans on meat and bonemeal, and North Rhine Westphalia bans British dairy produce. Each government will be given a grace period to correct the alleged breach before court action. A Commission official said: This is not something we want to do, but the member states know that they are breaking the rules when they impose their own import restrictions. Agreement has to he reached before such things can be done."

against Britain was ironic, given that it was itself the subject of a blanket ban, but its action could not be ignored.

Gerry Kiely, the Commission spokesman, noted that Britain would stand to gain if its infringement proceedings helped re-open markets on the Continent. On the action against Britain, he said: There is a certain understanding of the difficulty of Britain's position, but we have a legal responsibility."

The threat of court action will further sour the atmosphere as Douglas Hogg, the agriculture minister, prepares to present Britain's new case for revising the cull to European colleagues on Monday.

Major calls for end to soundbite politics

BY ALICE THOMSON POLITICAL REPORTER

JOHN MAJOR ended his two-week tour of Britain last night with a plea to Tony Blair for an end to soundbite

Despite making liberal use of them during his tour when discussing everything from his wife Norma to Labour's tax plans, the Prime Minister said he would prefer "mature debate" on the issues of the day.

Mr Major said he hoped the two leaders would be able to have serious discussions amid the "shot and shell" of everyday political battle in the runup to the General Election.

He complained that politics was being trivialised and blamed the speed of modern reporting, which he said put pressure on politicians to give reac-tions to matters that had happened shortly beforehand on the other side of

He said it was farcical that politicians were expected to have a view on everything, even hedge cutting in County Antrim. Instead they should be thinking about "the great issues that affect our life - our prosperity, our family, our nation and our future". Speaking at a fundraising lunch in

Glasgow for the Newspaper Press Fund, Mr Major said he wanted to concentrate his mind of the "great matters of the day rather than trivia," and he was wasting his time becoming involved in a battle of wits with interviewers over day-to-day and tariff reform could be debated in length and depth before the mass media age, so today issues like devolution, Europe and the future of Nato deserve serious attention," he said.

Mr Major called for a return to late 19th century politics when Prime Ministers were not constantly badgered by journalists looking for stories.

Labour said last night it was ludicrous for Mr Major to try to take the moral highground. Helen Liddell, Labour MP for Monklands East, said: The Prime Minister ought to clean up his own act before he starts lecturing others. He should lead by example and dump the trivial demon eyes campaign against Tony Blair."

Doctor mistook brain tumour for food allergy

A GP WHO treated a fiveyear-old brain tumour patient with homoeopathic remedies was ordered to be struck off yesterday after he admitted mistaking her symptoms for a peanut butter allergy.

Dr Robert Blomfield, 58. was found guilty of serious professional misconduct after he failed to carry out a brain scan or reflexes test on Eliza May Connelly.

Eliza, now 12, was left paralysed on the left side. blind and partly deaf. She was sent to horpital for emergency brain surgery in March 1990 hy another GP only when her parents moved to Liverpool from Dr Blomfield's practice in Hebden Bridge, west Yorkshire. The doctor wept as he admitted to the professional conduct committee of the General Medical Council that he might not have done enough to diagnose the illness.

Eliza's mother told the hearing that she went to his surgery in January 1990 when her daugher began suffering from vomiting, severe headaches, sensitivity to noise and light and started to walk with an uncoordinated "lolloping" gait. Despite these symptoms of a tumour, Dr Blomfield did not carry out a neurological examination or look into the child's eyes. Instead he diagnosed her as extremely sensitive and prescribed homoeo-

Dr Blomfield went to the family's house on March 30, only to find Eliza in severe pain and her parents extreme ly angry. "I came into a really serious situation. I was just thrown. It was as though I had been caught out, partly by my own fault," he told the hearing.

Despite correctly diagnosing hydrocephalus he did not write a referral letter, but simply gave Mrs Kennedy the address of a homoeopathic doctor in Liverpool.

On the family's arrival in Merseyside, friends took her to a local GP, who was "stunned" at Eliza's condition and immediately referred her to a specialist neurological unit at Walton Hospital for emergency surgery. She later developed meningitis and was in hospital for five months.

Major minor offers moral support to divorced friend

JAMES MAJOR, the Prime Minister's 22year-old-son, spent three hours in court yesterday to offer moral support to a divorced woman with whom he has been romantically linked. He received a parking ticket for his

While his parents prepared to travel to Balmoral for the Prime Minister's traditional summer weekend with the Queen. James Major sat in the waiting room of Cambridge County Court as Elaine Jordache and her former husband Michael remained closeted with judges and lawyers arguing over the final details of an acrimonious divorce that ended a six-year marriage.

James had travelled from Milton Keynes. where he is a Marks & Spencer trainee manager, apparently intending to comfort Mrs Jordache, 32. during a trying morning of legal negotiation. He sat patiently in the waiting room with Mrs Jordache's father but achieved little more than a brief wave as Mrs Jordache bustled from one courtroom to another with her legal team.

James had apparently hoped to be on hand to celebrate a final resolution to Mrs Jordache's divorce terms at lunchtime, but by lpm. with legal argument still in full flow behind closed doors, he had to return to work. It was then that he found his car had been ticketed for a parking infringement. The divorce case was adjourned and the parties must return to court at a date to be arranged.

When Mr Jordache, 42, a shopkeeper from Great Gransden. Cambridgeshire, filed for divorce a year ago, he named James Major as the third party. The couple are reported to have met when James began training at the group's Cambridge store three years ago with Mrs Jordache as his supervisor. They were said to have been interviewed by company officials when their relationship became known; he has since been moved to Milton Keynes, she to Leicester.

Their record.company, Creation, said: "Unfortunately the band will not be touring in the foreseeable future, but in every other respect Oasis will continue to function as a band. Oasis have all arrived back in England. Noel and Liam are spending time together."

Speculation was rife on Thursday that the band was about to split after Noel flew home to Britain alone after a dispute with his brother in which blows were exchanged. Their ninth American tour was abandoned two thirds of the way through, and fans feared that this time the rift was irreconcilable. Thousands who had bought tickets for concerts in Atlanta, West Palm Beach, Orlando and Tampa, were claiming their money back. Although critics said it was a publicity stunt, sources close to the band said that the brothers genuinely had reached breaking point with the strain of touring.

Yesterday morning Liam flew into Gatwick from Atlanta with the rest of the hand, refusing to comment. Sur-rounded by bodyguards, he was whisked into a waiting vehicle and refused even to trade his customary insults with reporters.

At one stage speculation over Noel's whereabouts was fuelled when a hired van collected two scooters from his home in St John's Wood. The pink and pale blue Velociferos, belonging to Rejected Paige takes Broadway by storm at last

FROM QUENTIN LETTS IN NEW YORK

TWO decades after the American actors' union sourly prevented her from performing Evita, the West End star Elaine Paige was cheered to the gods and received a prolonged standing ovation on her Broadway debut.

Paige, singing the title role in Sir Andrew Lloyd Webber's Sunset Boulevard, impressed American theatregoers with the power of her voice. New York critics yesterday talked of a "Sunset sensation" and an "impeccable performance" by the diminutive actress. "One can only hope she'll immigrate here permanently," David Stearns of USA Today said. Probably the most remarkable voice in the popular musical theatre today," added Clive Barnes of the New York

Sir Andrew, who was in the audience, said afterwards that he was thrilled by Paige's singing and only wished that he had cast her from the start of the show - this from a man who in the past has shattered the egos of leading ladies by telling them that they were not up to playing the part of the ageing Hollywood star Norma Desmond.

Members of the audience leaving the Minskoff theatre after Thursday's opening night could not get over Paige's performance. "Boy. that's some voice," one elderly woman said to her friend. "And did you see the size of the girl? It must be the British musical-hall tradition."

The show's spectacular sets had to be altered for the 5ft Paige. The steps on the sweeping staircase were raised a good few inches to prevent her from vanishing behind the bannister.

Some 250 friends and family members travelled to New York to support her. "Knowing they were there made me a bit emotional when I came out on stage at the start, but it is an emotional scene so that helped me," she said at the after-show party, where her 81-year-old mother, Irene, not to be outdone, gave an impromptu display of tap dancing.

Her octogenarian father. Eric Bickerstaff, a sometime drummer from Worthing. West Sussex, on his first trip to the United States, said: "I knew she could do it. I am very proud of her."

Paige's triumph coincides with a minor British boom on Broadway. The Royal Nat-ional Theatre's Michael Gambon, who has also had trouble securing "landing per-mission" from the American actors' union, is making his Broadway debut in David Hare's play Skylight. He has been previewed by one excitable local paper as "the greatest actor in the English language".

Nurses quit over s claims of abuse against elderly

TWO senior nurses resigned and five others have been suspended after allegations of abuse against elderly patients at a Glasgow hospital. An independent investigation is being launched into claims that patients were mentally abused, neglected and had abused, increased and had belongings stolen while they were on a long-stay ward in the geriatric unit of Victoria Infirmary in Glasgow. Barrie Small, chief executive of the Victoria Infirmary NHS trust, said that the results of an internal report were being passed to Greater Glasgow Health Board to enable it to conduct an inquiry. The susnended nurses face disciplinary hearings next week.

The senior nurse in charge of the geriatric ward resigned yesterday, two days after a staff nurse quit. Both are

The internal report revealed cruelty, racism and theft, possibly dating back two years, at the 32-bed North 4 Ward. Mike Watson, Glasgow Central MP, met the trust management yesterday to ask why the allegations had not come to light more quickly.

He said he believed that it was the fifth time since last vear that he had visited the hospital because of complaints. At Christmas bodies were left in a corridor outside the overflowing mortuary. He said: "It is obviously a matter of great concern, particularly that nobody came forward within the existing structure of the hospital to reveal what was going on." The allegations include claims that one nurse, who has worked on the ward for two years, tormented a Jewish patient, refused to call a priest for a dying patient and forced a Sikh to eat meat until he was sick. There were also complaints that he sexually harassed staff and was intolerant of their religious beliefs.

He was alleged to have given a terminally ill patient oral medicine and refused to help when she choked. Patients' dressings were not changed and one patient was called Victor Meldrew, making him crv.

The suspicions of ill-treatment are thought to have emerged during investigations into allegations of financial irregularities on the ward. prompted by an anonymous phonecall. An internal inquiry was launched in June amid claims that the charge nurse had stolen money from patients for about two years.

But during interviews with 45 workers and former hospital employees a picture of wider abuse emerged. The main allegations relate to the two nurses who have resigned. The five suspended nurses are alleged to have known what was happening. but failed to raise the alarm.

Jim Devine, Unison regional organiser, called for an end to hospital "gagging orders" making their concerns public.

Lilley's staff complain of political pressure

By VALERIE ELLIOTT WHITEHALL EDITOR

CIVIL servants at the Department of Social Security have made the highest number of complaints that ministers and political staff expect them to break their code of impartiality, it was claimed yesterday. The charge was made by Jonathan Baume, deputy general secretary of the Association of First Division Civil Servants, who said: "Complaints have come from across departments, although the DSS stands out in particular as an area of difficulty." Ministers at Peter Lilley's department were said to be surprised by the allegations. One source said: "We have a recognised complaints procedure and ministers are not aware that any complaints have been made under this. DSS ministers are punctilious in ensuring that the usual proprieties are observed. A senior Conservative Party source said: "A lot of charges made by the FDA have proved to be unfounded and I expect these, too, will go the same way." Boy sees twin brother suffocate in corn pit

By KATHRYN KNIGHT

A BOY watched helplessly as his identical twin suffocated to death after being sucked into a corn pit as they played at their parents' farm. Benjamin and Christopher

Chambers, 8, were playing in a barn when Benjamin was sucked inside the pit as he looked for a wellington boot. The boys' parents, ivor and Kim, rushed out after hearing Christopher's screams and struggled to free their son as he sank into the corn. Paramedics also tried to resuscitate Benjamin but he was pronounced dead at Leicester

Royal Infirmary, Paul Pugsley, a firefighter who was the first to reach the remote farmhouse at Bagworth, Leicestershire, said that Benjamin had been sucked down as if he was standing in quicksand.

"Once the parents had located the position of the boy, they started to dig him out," he said. "His mother tried desperately to free the trapped youngster and his father used a tractor to remove corn. II was a real team effort but all to no avail."

Meal that left minister with a nasty aftertaste

A DINNER at the Seafood Restaurant in Blackpool on Wednesday night proved to be the dramatic finale of a strategy to convince voters that Labour would not be held to ransom by the unions if it should gain power.

Over Dover sole and muscadet. Stephen Byers, a Labour employment spokes-man, held forth with four political correspondents - Jon Hibbs from The Daily Telegraph, Roland Watson from the Daily Express, John Wil-liams from the Daily Mirror and myself. He expanded on Labour thinking on a variety of issues, including the relationship between trade unions

The meal in the popular, packed restaurant, was convivial. A relaxed Mr Byers openly discussed policy matters on "lobby rules", which require political journalists to protect their sources.

Lobby journalists from rival newspapers often get together to take out a politician during the conference season and, while they can use the information given, the convention is that the source is not identified. Mr Byers knew he could be more indiscreet because he would not be publicly identified. We joked when a BBC correspondent, armed with tape recorder, entered the restaurant but we were tucked away out of microphone reach.

After claret and coffee the journalists shared the £180 bill

Monks: furious about

It was clear that the Labour leadership was considering the ultimate sanction - a severance of the historic link with the unions - as a threat to unions not to rock the boat. The conversation cannot be detailed without breaking lobby rules, but I stand by everything in that report. Once spin-doctors were alerted by telephone calls that several papers were running a story about union links, they started issuing denials. These began at about 7pm, hours before they knew the substance of the reports. Mr Byers also issued a denial before the been printed.

In a bizarre move, he broke lobby rules by admitting that he had had dinner with the four of us. At 8.45pm he put out a statement conceding that he was the source, but denied the reports. By then he had merely had read out to him the headline of The Times's first edition: "Blair ready to cut links with unions".

Yesterday morning the denials continued. Mr Byers had the onerous task of appearing on radio and television programmes all day. This morning he said the reports were "misleading" and "exaggerated". But by lunchtime he refused to rule out the possibility that the links would be broken in five years' time.

The denials and counter denials followed a familiar pattern. Earlier that week David Blunkett, the Shadow Employment Secretary and Mr Byers's boss, had been caught out in a similar process. On Sunday morning The Sunday Times carried a story - buried on page two - that Labour planned to introduce compulsory arbitration. Spindoctors briefing on Sunday did not try to knock the story down. The trade unions gathering at the TUC conference were furious. On Monday morning, Peter Hain, a Shadow Employment Minister, insisted that Labour was not talking about "compulsory arbritration" but "binding arbitration" on a voluntary basis. The next day Mr Blunkett wrote an article in the Evening Standard spelling out proposals to force unions to hold second ballots if the employers put forward an improved offer. John Monks, the TUC General Secretary, got hot under the collar at the idea of legislation.

On the lunchtime bulletins. Mr Blunkett denied he was considering laws for second ballots. But Tony Blair confused the issue when he arrived to address a private dinner in Blackpool, when he said Labour would not "rush into legislation". Other party sources built up the story again that new laws were indeed on the agenda.

By now Mr Monks, a generally mild-mannered man who is a Blair ally, was furious about the conflicting reports and the renewed briefing that Labour would legislate. He was also angry that the party had hijacked his conference. In an unprecedented outburst against the Labour leadership he accused it of having issued confusing statements that served to push things backRelations deteriorated further between the Labour party and trade union leaders over the next two days when the TUC backed calls for a £4.26 minimum wage and an extension of workers' rights beyond current Labour policy. By now the headlines were playing well for the Labour leadership. Mr Blair was said to be "delighted" about the reports of his determination to distance Labour from the unions. He had been anxious all week to play to the wider electorate and was "relaxed" about the union fury. Labour was getting across the mess-age it intended to wavering Tory voters: that it was no longer in hock to the trade union barons.

Wednesday night provided the icing on the cake, although some feel that Mr Byers went harder than Mr Blair would have liked. As we finished our coffee at the Seafood Restaurant. Mr Byers quipped: "I hope I haven't told you too much." By 9pm on Thursday night he probably realised

Union says some children are encouraged to defy discipline

Teachers attack poor parenting

By JOHN O'LEARY EDUCATION EDITOR

THE expulsion of a violent five-year-old and a dispute over a disruptive boy of seven represent only the tip of an iceberg of indiscipline in primary schools, a teachers' lead-

Nigel de Gruchy, the general secretary of the National Association of Schoolmasters and Union of Women Teachers, blamed "negative parenting" for a rash of expulsions and disputes. He said that some parents were not merely failing to control their children but were encouraging them to defy teachers who try to impose discipline.

The closure of special schools was at the root of growing disciplinary problems, Mr de Gruchy said.
"Integrating emotionally dis-stream education, who would previously gone into special schools, has been a policy disaster on a par with care in the community.

Official figures show that an average of six primary schoolchildren are expelled every day of term. Mr de Gruchy. whose members at Manton School, in Worksop, Nottinghamshire, have refused to teach seven-year-old Matthew Wilson, said: "When children arrive at school on their first day - even nursery school totally out of control, there is nothing teachers can do."

The latest disciplinary case involves a five-year-old boy expelled from a primary school in southeast Essex after 30 violent incidents involving pupils and staff. Some of the attacks took place while the boy was only four. The child, said to have attacked teachers, pupils and dinner ladies. Some needed hospital treatment for cuts and bruises.

Essex County Council is trying to find another school to take him but the boy's reputation has made the search difficult. The education authority is providing home tuition at a cost of £5.000 a vezr, three times the bill for educating other pupils.

The attacks took place over several months and included swearing and spitting at classmates, throwing food at staff and making sexual comments to women teachers and girls at the school.

Mike Barnett, Essex's education spokesman, said: "The school tried everything it could to change the boy's attitude and make it more positive, but eventually it had the child. There are only a small number of pupils who cause this sort of problem, but they can be very disruptive to the rest of the school." Mr Barnett said that when the boy was expelled his father threatened the school's headmistress, saying that he would knee-cap her and wreck her

At Manton School attempts to settle the dispute over ten-year-old Matthew Wilson failed on Thursday evening and parents continued their boycott yesterday.

SENIOR pupils and teachers at a comprehensive school are carrying identity cards as par; of a security clampdown in the wake of the Dunblane

The pupils have been included because they are allowed to attend lessons out of uniform and security staff might mistake an intruder as a student. The passes allow the holders to unlock external doors to the school premises. which have been closed as part of the extra security.

Peter Illingworth, the head teacher, said: "We all believe it is in everyone's interests. Each pass includes a photo and personal details of the holder. We are not trying to create a fortress, just a safer environ-ment." The bill for the electronic swipe doorlocks and passes has been met from school funds.

Other security measures introduced at the school include new fencing, cutting the number of entrances and the installation of closed-circuit television cameras. Visitors are also issued with cards.

All work and no playtime makes a dull child

By JOHN O'LEARY EDUCATION EDITOR

SCHOOLS are damaging children's social development by cutting back traditional breaks and lunchtime recreation, psychologists report today. A survey by academics at the London University Institute of Education found that most state schools have reduced the amount of free time allowed to pupils over the past five years. Lunchtimes are shorter and many schools have scrapped an afternoon break. Disciplinary problems and a wish to increase teaching time were the main reasons cited. Almost a quarter of the schools surveyed had reported a decline in pupils' behaviour at breaktime. Dr Peter Blatchford, who carried out the research with Clare Sumpner in the institute's psychology and special needs group, said yesterday: "It is at breaktime that children develop a distinctive and vibrant culture, separate from the school culture and not easily recognised by adults. We need to consider more. deliberately the effects of current policy and change in schools on pupils' social lives."

He will present the findings to the mual conference of the British Educational Research Association at Lancaster University. One result of change is that primary children had fewer opportunities to mix freely with their peers. Interaction at breaktime had added importance as they were more likely to be driven to school.

The conclusions were drawn from two studies, one of which sought the opinions of 100 pupils about that breaks enabled children to "manage conflict and aggression", developing friendships and group relations, as well as simply having fun.

Dr Blatchford says in his paper. "There has been little recognition, especially at secondary school level, of the social and educational value of undirected activities. Life in the playground can help the acquisition of many subtle social skills."

Babies used to sneak drugs into prisons

By Richard Ford, home correspondent

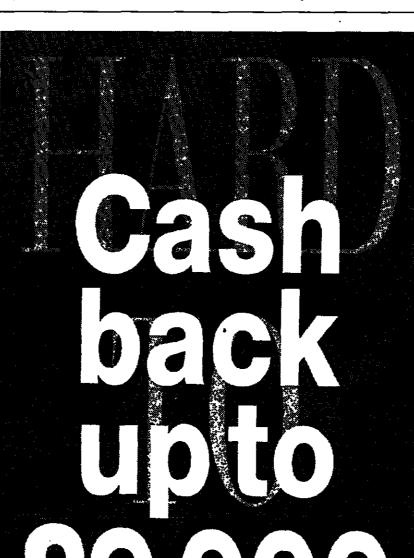

CHILDREN and probation officers are being body-searched before entering jails as part of a security clamp-

Probation officers have been told they can expect a body frisk and examination of hair. ears and mouth at high sections in England and Wales. They may also be asked to remove their shoes and socks before entering a prison.

Children visiting relatives in top-security prisons may be asked to remove their outer clothing and babies are liable to be fully changed. In one case at Winchester Prison, the dress of a six-year-old girl was removed so that police officers could search the lining to see if there were any hidden drugs. Kayley Evans's dress was removed in the presence of her mother and a female police officer after a tip-off but no drugs were found.

The tougher measures follow reports into escapes from Whitemoor and Parkhurst prisons which were highly critical of security at 134 jails in England and Wales. Prison officers suspect that drugs have been brought into iails hidden in nappies or baby food. Last year at Perth jail, cannabis was found concealed in a jacket in a child's

Violent patient on the run from mental hospital

Reynolds, 29, who has a distinctive iattoo of the rock guitarist Jimi Hendrix on the side of his head, escaped after being allowed into the grounds on Thursday night.

Police in Cambridgeshire last night warned the public not to approach the Scutsman, who has a serious mental illness, as he was likely to be violent. Police sources said that Reynolds had been violent in the past when approached.

Keith Drummond, director of the hospital, said that Reynolds had been allowed

In October 1994 Christopher Smithson, 34, another patient with a history of violence, also absconded from the hospital. He was found 50 miles away in Kings Lynn, Norfolk. A GIANT Victorian telescope has been restored and returned to its rightful place in the grounds of one of Ireland's finest castles nearly 90 years after it was dismantled.

Telescope with view of the past

Rosse, the third earl's greatgreat-grandson, whose famly, the Parsons, have lived at Birr Castle since the 17th century, said that the telescope was the greatest and most powerful in the world in the last century. It was built at a cost of £30,000 and the elescope's mirror was made in foundries fired by turf from local bogs. A complex system of pulleys sky the earl wanted to observe from the eyepiece 60ft above ground. A similar system will allow visitors to Birr Castle to enjoy the same views as the 3rd earl when the museum opens in 1998. Important discoveries were made using the telescope, in spite of Ireland's inclement weather. Sir Bernard Lovell, the astronomer, wrote of the telescope: "Objects hitherto seen only as dim areas of light were resolved. The most famous is the case of an object known as the Whirlpool Galaxy. Lord Rosse's drawing of this clearly shows the spiral arrangements of the stars. He had discovered the spiral galaxies which are now own Milky Way."

The present Lord Rosse hailed the £1.2 million restoration of the telescope as the fulfilment of a lifetime's dream. "It really is a tremendous moment to have the Leviathan restored so that everyone can appreciate the achievement of the last century." He added: "Ireland is amazingly dark and has little light pollution. The night skies are usually incredibly clear. So it was not crazy to erect a telescope in the middle of the bog."

The next hurdle for Lord Rosse is to raise money for a new mirror for the telescope. But he also has his eye on securing on loan the original mirror, which was acquired by the Science Museum in

£12m plea to rescue the house that time forgot

By Dalya Alberge arts correspondent

A DECAYING stately home that has barely changed since the 18th century will lose its historic looks forever unless £12.7 million is raised by December. The National Trust for Scotland has launched a desperate appeal for help, determined to prevent Newhailes, near Edinburgh, from being sold and stripped of its original decoration. A sale would mean that the walls decorated in the 1730s could be repainted and pictures dispersed to collectors around the world.

Sir Mark Dalrymple, the last baronet of Newhailes, died in 1976. His widow is distressed at having to sell the house, which was occupied by her husband's ancestors from 1707. Lady Dalrymple said: Moving out will be a wrench, having lived here for 50 years.

After years of struggling against dry rot and the elements, proofing it against the wind and weather, the trustees of Sir Mark's estate have decided to donate the house and its grounds to the National Trust for Scotland on condition that they raise £12.7 million for the contents and restoration. Otherwise, everything will be sold.

The NTS estimates that £3 million needs to be spent on restoration over the next three to five years. It would, for example, repair the exquisite Baroque plasterwork whose gilded seashells is a motif found throughout the house. It has fallen to pieces over the years: Lady Dalrymple collected them into piles, hoping they could be put back one day.

Carpets and curtains are badly frayed and layers of dust remain untouched in parts of the house. Some of the windows are cracked, the garden is overgrown and the stable is decaying.

The National Art Collections Fund, Britain's largest art charity, fears that the house and its magnificent art collection could be lost if the appeal fails. It has taken the unusual step of buying four portraits from the collection for £245,000.

The Dalrymple family included distinguished lawyers who served as judges. Lord Advocates and Secretaries of State. The house is believed to have been designed by William and John Adam, whose team of craftsmen appear in the accounts.

Computer implant in brain gives sight to the blind

A GROUP of blind people have had their sight partially restored by microchip implants in their brains, a researcher said yesterday. The chips have allowed the natients to see grainy images and outlines bearned to them from

Professor Peter Thomas, a British computing expert, said that the chip was put in the back of the head connected to the visual cortex by bio-engineers at Utah University. Speaking at the British Association meeting in Birmingham, he said that the team had been able to give blind people a rudimentary kind of vision. like a grainy football scoreboard seen close up. They can see outlines of objects."

The sight research highlights how the personal comnuter, once a bulky device on an office desk, is becoming so small that it can be worn or slotted into parts of the body. hand-to-hand combat. Professor Thomas, of the computing department at the University of the West of England, said that there were scores of developments in the field. At the Massachusetts Institute of Technology researchers were trying to develop shoes that could pick up static electricity from carpets to power computer chips without the need for batteries. He said that the forerunner of chips in the brain would be head-mounted displays — a small computer and cameras in goggles. The technology to aid mental power would end the embarrassment of forgetportant information linked with social or business meet-

Professor Thomas said that simple wearable computers, disguised as watches and items clothing such as ties and shirt collars, were already emerging. "They will become a fashion accessory. Philips in The Netherlands is developing musical T-shirts. They have circuits woven into the cloth and you have a headset. So one day you can wear your hip-hop shirt and another day your rap T-shirt," he said. The wired fabric was washable.

Professor Thomas said: "The overall idea is that you carry all the computing power you need around on your body rather than in a bulky personal computer. Computers in the future will be fashion accessories with aesthetic designs."

As for chips in peoples brains, Professor Thomas said that the barrier was not necessarily technical. "There are obviously medical, legal and

Dr Andrew Hill, of Leeds University, told the meeting that the pressure to be thin. reinforced by magazines, television and even the changing shapes of dolls, was already well-developed in pre-adolescent girls.
Sindy dolls provided one example of the pressures. "Originally manufactured in the early 1960s as a toy for young teenage girls, thirty-something Sindy has lost her brunette bob, plain clothes and doll-like shape," he said. She is now unashamedly blonde, pointedly thin, dressed immaculately with a lifestyle to match, and bought for the six, seven or eight-yearold girl. Not only does 90s Sindy depict the ideal appearance and lifestyle of 90s women, she does so for girls only halfway to puberty."

Dr Hill questioned 176 eight-year-olds, offering them images of different body shapes to discover how they perceived their bodies and whether they were aware of dieting. The girls consistently picked a body shape thinner than their own and those who were especially aware of dieting had the lowest self-esteem.

Similar tests with nineyear-olds produced the same results, with 41 per cent placing their preferred body shape at a point thinner than

Ministers accused of dishonesty over funding

Sir Derek: called for GOVERNMENT ministers were charged yesterday with "total ineptitude as well as dishonesty" over university

Sir Derek Roberts, Provost of University College London, marked his accession to the presidency of the British Association for the Advancement of Science by launching a sharp attack on the Government, declaring that it was time for a change. "The present Government has been in power so long that it has become sloppy and thinks it can get away with anything," he said. "We have been governed so badly that almost anybody else deserves a chance."

He cited two examples of alleged ministerial dishonesty. The first came when the Prime Minister told the Commons that the universities had nothing to complain about since spending on them had risen by 23 per cent in real terms in the past ten years. "This is sophistry." he said. "It's being economical with the truth. The reality is that, over the same time, the number of students has increased by 70 per cent."

The second was the decision forced upon the Education Department by the Treasury to cut £400 million out of university equipment budgets. The department had claimed that the cuts could be made good by money from industry, a claim that Sir Derek said was "bloody ludicrous"

You can't get private industry to pay for fume cupboards or for repairing laboratory benches," he said. "Privately. the minister has admitted to me that it was a cock-up, but added that if I expected him to admit that publicly I must be very naive." Sir Derek, a former research director of GEC, said that the worst thing would be to allow Britain's glorious scientific history to affect the future. "The fact that we've had lots of Nobel prizes in the past doesn't mean we'll have any in the future. Let's have pride, by all means, but we have to get things right for the future, or we'll get an infinitely worse social and economic situation in the next 50 years."

Although he favoured a change of government, Sir Derek did not hold out much hope that it would make a big difference. "A Labour government probably couldn't spend any more on education and the universities. But the present Government is so tired I'd like to see a

No. Low cost index funds, like the Virgin Growth Pep, don't employ fund managers. They operate by simply buying shares in every company which makes up the best known performance benchmark the FT-SE Actuaries' All-Share Index.

Well, if that's true, the Virgin Growth PEP would not be the top performing fund in its sector over the last year*.

Vaccine price stops mass campaign to beat liver disease

By JEREMY LAURANCE, HEALTH CORRESPONDENT

every child against the potentially fatal liver disease hepatitis B could be launched if makers of the vaccine reduced the price, the Government's chief scientific adviser on the infection said yesterday.

Professor Jangu Banatvala. chairman of the Health Department's advisory group on hepatitis and Professor of Clinical Virology at St Thomas's Hospital. London, was responding to a call from leading virologists and liver experts to include hepatitis B in childhood vaccination.

One in 1,000 people in Britain are estimated to be carriers of the infection. The vaccine costs E5 per shot, putting the cost of a mass campaign between E20 and £30 million. In the United States, where mass vaccination is carried out, the vaccine costs $1 (66p) per shot. Three vaccinations are needed, the second given a month after the first and the third six months later. Many carriers do not know they are infected and the total could be up to 12 times higher than the estimate. Between 25 and 40 per cent will eventually die of cirrhosis or liver cancer but it can take 40 years to develop. A spokesman for the manu-

A CAMPAIGN to vaccinate facturers SmithKline Beecham said that bulk purchasing would make the vaccine cheaper. Professor Banatvala said the high cost of the vaccine and the relatively low level of infection in Britain compared with other countries made a mass vaccination programme difficult to justify.

"If we could get the cost down significantly, then I think we would be there. The decision would be easy if the carrier rate was very much lower than it is: mass vaccination would not be worth it. It would also be easy if it were very much higher: we would have to do it. It is more difficult when the infection rate is in the middle."

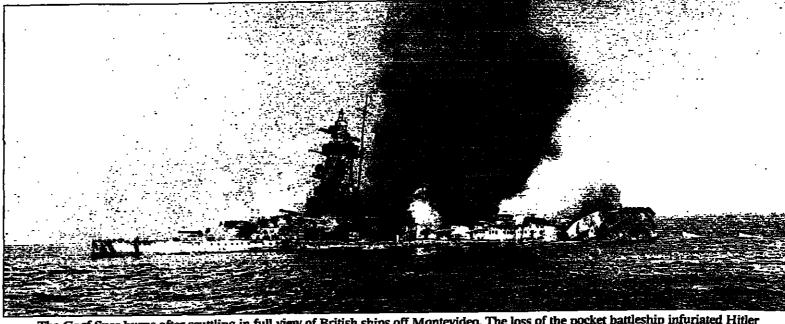

Some 75 countries, including Belgium, France and Germany, have introduced universal hepatitis B vaccination for children. However, the infection rate is twice as high in France and almost five times as high in Germany compared with Britain. The World Health Organisation recommends that all countries should integrate it into their immunisation programmes

Professor Arie Zuckerman. Dean of the Royal Free Hospital School of Medicine in medical panel calling for universal vaccination of children, said: "Hepatitis B is a very serious yet preventable disease, which currently kills one to two million people every year worldwide. The hepatitis B virus is 100 times more infectious than HIV."

Professor Zuckerman, member of the World Health Organisation advisory group on viral diseases, added: "Over the past ten years there have been major demographic changes within the UK and an increase in foreign travel. This means that more individuals are at risk of contracting hepatitis B."

The panel members said the consequences of hepatitis B in children are far more serious than for adults, with an estimated 25 per cent of child cases proving fatal as a result of cirrhosis, liver cancer or acute liver failure.

The Health Department said that Britain had one of the lowest rates of hepatitis B in the world. "The Government's position is that we advise immunisation for people who are considered to be at increased risk. We are looking into the WHO proposals for universal childhood vaccination, but it is still under

Langsdorff's dockside barter did him no good. With the Uruguayans denying him sanctuary, and with rumours of approaching British reinforcements, he put to sea. But only three miles out and in full view of the British, the

Graf Spee blew up. The crew had left before the scuttling but Langsdorff shot himself. The demise of the Graf Spee infuriated Hitler and it is believed that the captain overestimated the forces against him. But with his strict code of military honour, Langsdorff could not contemplate the ignominy of surrender.

His binoculars were bought in 1943 by the father of Phyllis Oakshett de Regusci. Her family, originally from Cheam. Surrey, was running a business in Buenos Aires. Mrs Oakshett de Regusci, 74, who lives in Montevideo but has relatives in England, said yesterday: "Langsdorff must have had some idea at the time what the end would be to give away something as important as his binoculars. There is a long promenade here overlooking the river and I remember everybody went out to see what was happening when the Graf Spee left. There was great excitement. People on this side of the river supported the Allies but the other side supported the Axis.

There was a recognition that Langsdorff was a considerate man. He wasn't a fanatic like some of them."

IVF expert argues against age limit

LORD WINSTON, the leading fertility doctor, yesterday spoke against an inflexible age limit for women seeking such treatment.

While admitting he was "not keen" to promote in-vitro fertilisation for older women, Lord Winston did not see the value in setting "cut-off points" whether at 38 or 45 years. "One of the social issues facing us today is that, as women take up career opportunities, broaden their horizons, so they leave reproduction until later in that when they ask for fertility treatment on the NHS, at say, the age of 40, they are told:

No, you are too old." Some might be readier for childbirth later than others, he said. "I don't think it is appropriate to give treatment on de-mand, but I do believe you have to look at each person on the merits of their case."

"In my view, the pain of infertility is as serious as any kind of pain. even though it might not be physical. So why single out assisted reproductive technology as the thing we would wish to penalise?"

Advances in IVF would soon make it possible to implant single embryos, reducing the risk of multiple births, which were mainly caused by other treatments such as fertility drugs, he claimed. He also argued that IVF treatment would eventually save the health service money.

But Professor Jean-Pierre Relier, a neo-natologist at a Paris hospital, argued that assisted reproductive technology was expensive and had led to a rise in the problems that he had long tried to reduce: premature delivery, infant mortality and low birth rate. The risk of multiple preg-nancy and the possible need for selective abortion, which he called "ethically dubious", could also cause psychological problems. Anglicans are united by love of good fight

By Ruth Gledhill, religion correspondent

THE Church of England is a quarrelling, batty family which nevertheless commands the loyalty of most of its members, according to a senior Church commentator

Behind its Gospel of peace and love, the Church is a hotbed of disputes ranging from rows in the cathedral close to feuds between neighbouring parishes which refuse to share a cleric because they were on different sides in the Civil War.

In O Blest Communion!, Betty Saunders, a writer with the Church Times for 17 years, quotes a dean who says that there are other cathedrals as unhappy as Lincoln, which has been in turmoil since the exhibition of its Magna Carta in Australia lost £56,000.

"Only," says the dean, "it hasn't leaked out." Mrs Saunders also describes how a woman pulled a gun on John Campbell, verger of Lincoln, in the vestry.

Peterborough Cathedral, traditionally a haven of Anglo-Catholicism, has been upset by the appointment of a wildly evangelical" dean. There was trouble at Salisbury be-tween the cathedral authorities and the wife of the then bishop over a plan for a new road through the cathedral

The disputes in parishes are less public but equally intense. often centring on the 1980 Alternative Service Book (ASB), which most modern clergy prefer to the 1662 Book of Common Prayer.

in a Devon church, Mrs Saunders reports, a visitor threw the ASB at the churchwarden and "boomed out his preferred version of the service", while the congregation continued undaunted with theirs. Nobody complained because it was known that he had put a £20 note in the Jewish New Year is a time to bless and celebrate life

ix years ago, my fam-ily and I left home to take a sabbatical in Israel. We wanted a period of quiet before taking up the challenge of the Chief Rabbinate, so we went to Jerusalem in search of peace. Instead we found ourselves in the midst of the Gulf War.

Thirty-nine times during those anxious weeks the sirens sounded, and we knew a Scud missile attack was on the way. We put on our gas masks, in case the missiles contained chemi-cal warheads. We went into our sealed room, and waited, and prayed. When the all-clear sounded, we emerged into the calm thankful to be alive.

That experience taught me what Rosh Hashanah - the Jewish New Year we celebrate today and tomorrow — is really about. It is not about war, but it is about the feeling that your life is hanging in the bal-ance, and about the discovery, in the midst of crisis, that merely being alive is a gift of God.

The festival itself revolves around majestic themes: life and death, good and evil, repentance and forgiveness. We reaffirm our faith that human history is not "sound and fury, signifying nothing", but the arena in which we strive to create relationships built on love and trust, compassion and justice. We think about the year that has passed and how we faced its challenges. It is a moment of self-reflective honesty when we are conscious of the wrongs we have done, the times other people needed us and we were not there. the occasions when we gave in to small animosities, and we think of how we might make amends. Through these thoughts runs the sound of the shofar, the ram's horn we blow on these days. Some say the shofar is the sound of our sadness as we remember our missed chances for doing good. Others hear it as a cry to Heaven for divine mercy. One ancient tradition sees the shofar as a reminder of the horn of the ram Abraham offered when God told him not to sacrifice his son Isaac, because human life few years I have heard in the shofar an echo of the sirens during the Gulf War. It is a sound of warning, as if to say: do not take life for granted. Religious faith is an affirmation of trust in the face of danger. Only when we know how fragile life is can we become selfconscious about it and learn to make a blessing over it.

Often, when I read books of Jewish history, I wonder at the sheer tenacity of the people whose fate I share, its miraculous survival through the millennia. What was it that made generation after generation of Jews - so often scattered, powerless and persecuted - stay loyal to their faith, live by it and hand it on to their children as their most precious heritage?

great non-Jewish thinkers, among them Pascal, Nietzsche, Tolstoy and Berdyaev, were equally puzzled. What, asked Mark Twain, is the secret of Jewish immortality?

The best answer I have yet found is simply this: that Judaism is one of civilisation's most remarkable celebrations of life. Almost the whole of Jewish ritual consists in taking the simplest pleasures - eating, drinking, home, the family, study, debate, friendship and community - and investing them with sanctity, making a blessing over life itself. Never more so than on Rosh Hashanah, when we hear the siren of the ram's horn and turn to Heaven with one simple prayer. Write us in the book of life.

Iraq calls off attacks on American air patrols suspend attacks on Americanled coalition aircraft patrolling no-fly zones in the north and south of the country from midnight after a request from Russia. The Defence Department in Washington immediately hailed the decision as "an encouraging move to reduce tension".

The statement from Baghdad was clearly aimed at undermining President Clinton's avowed intention to launch new strikes against Iraqi targets.

The promise to suspend surface-to-air missile attacks on patrolling aircraft came as Washington continued to build up its forces in the region, with the arrival of eight F117A Stealth fighters in Kuwait and a second aircraft carrier, the USS Enterprise. with another 75 fighter aircraft on board, due in the Gulf by

AS THE Americans closed in on Iraq last night in anticipation of further attacks, the question being asked was why the allies had not brought about the death of President Saddam Hussein.

The company has outlined a £150 million plan that would see the old Wembley stadium replaced by a new state-of-theart multisports stadium by the year 2000. A final decision is expected by the end of the year. Turnover rose 24 per cent to £65 million. There is no dividend. The company said it

London record as Wall St surges

By Janet Bush, economics correspondent

SHARES in London hit another record yesterday, cataputted higher by Wall Street which surged after a set of exceptionally good American inflation figures which allayed fears of higher interest rates.

News that US consumer prices rose by only 0.1 per cent in August added to Thursday's news of a 0.1 per cent fall in underlying producer prices and underlined the fact that American inflation remains extremely subdued. There was also evidence that the economy's momenturn may be slowing from a robust second-quarter performance with news yesterday that retail sales in America only rose by a modest 0.2 per cent in August.

Taken together, yesterday's figures made the case for an aggressive rise in US interest rates far less obvious.

As recently as the beginning of last week, the markets had become convinced that the Federal Open Market Committee, which meets on September 24, will push up rates, perhaps by 0.5 per cent.

These certainties grew after Janet Yellen, a Fed governor who has the reputation of being growth oriented and dovish on inflation, gave warning that America was entering "the inflationary danger zone™.

However, after this week's benign inflation figures, trad-ers are beginning to think that the Fed may limit a rate rise to 0.25 per cent, or perhaps even postpone any monetary tightening until there are more concrete signs that inflationary pressures are building. Lawrence Meyer, a Fed governor, told an American Economic Association conference yesterday that structural change in the economy could mean that unemployment may now be able to fall further before inflationary pressures build. Speaking at the same conference, Joseph Stiglitz, chairman of the White House Council of Economic Advisers. said that unemployment could fall even below current levels, the lowest for seven years, without a burst of inflation. · He said inflationary pressures were not as great as people

The easing of fears in the markets about American interest rates powered Wall Street to new highs and 30vear Treasury bonds jumped by more than a full point, pushing yields down below the 7 per cent level.

In early afternoon trading, the Dow Jones industrial average was more than 80 points higher, having rallied by more than 50 points just after the opening in response to yesterday's statistics.

In Europe bonds surged in sympathy with events across the Atlantic and British and German stock markets closed at new record highs. The FT-SE 100 index ended 35.3 points higher at 3,967.9, nearly 75 points better on the week. Frankfurt's Dax 30 index closed 25.64 points higher at 2,595.96, very near to record highs reached during trading.

French shares also scored solid gains. There was news yesterday that French consumer prices dropped more sharply than expected in August. The annual inflation rate fell to between 1.6 and 1.7 per cent from 2.3 per cent in July, according to the official figures.

The German parliament yesterday approved three key Bills that ensure most of the spending cuts Bonn is seeking for next year to hit the Maastricht Treaty's deficit criteria for entry into a single

Brussels launches Cadbury inquiry

CADBURY Schweppes's £620 million sale of its UK bottling nterests came under threat last night after the European Commission announced it was launching a detailed investigation into the takeover. The Commission said in a tatement that it wanted to xamine the impact of the sale of Coca-Cola Schweppes Beverages, which is jointly owned by Cadbury and the Coca-Cola Company, to Coca-Cola Enterprises, the US bottling

The blocking of the deal would be a major blow to Cadbury's expansion plans. Cadbury agreed the sale in June to improve its balance sheet after the $1.7 billion acquisition last year of Dr Pepper, the soft drinks company. It has enabled the company to halve its debt burden to about £700 million. Cadbury described the decision last night as "unexpected". The company said it would make further comment when it had digested the document but added that it felt part of the reason for the continued investigation was that the Commission had insufficient time to gather full information over the summer. Cadbury agreed to sell its 51 per cent stake in Coca-Cola Schweppes Beverages to Coca-Cola Enterprises in June. Coca-Cola Enterprises, which is 44 per cent owned by the Coca-Cola company, also agreed to purchase the Coca-

Cola company's stake. The Commission's decision to open the second stage of a competition investigation usu-ally implies that it has serious reservations about the consequences of a commercial deal. The Commission examines about 30 cases a year at this level, although very few deals are completely blocked.

Imro rushes out unit trust review

By GEORGE SIVELL

THE City watchdog investi-gating three Morgan Grenfell investment funds last night rushed out a review of the unit trust industry's investments in unquoted companies, an issue at the centre of the Morgan Grenfell affair.

Imro, the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation, discovered in an investigation launched this week that only 13 per cent of unit trusts show holdings in non-approved or unquoted securities. The total value of unquoted securities averages only 1.79 per cent of portfolios, Imro has found, and only 17 trusts reported holdings in pre-listed securities, another issue involved in the Morgan Grenfell affair:

culled from 1,669 of the 1,677

authorised unit trusts. The rest are either inactive or have yet to file a manager's report. The findings are likely to restore public confidence in the industry after the wave of redemptions by investors since the temporary Morgan Gren-fell suspensions last week. However, Imro said last night that its main concern had been to establish the position of all unit trusts.

Phillip Thorpe, the Imro chief executive who has been investigating Morgan Gren-fell, said: "These figures confirm that the vast majority of unit trusts are only invested in quoted securities. Even where a few trusts do hold unquoted non-approved or pre-listed securities, they represent a very small percentage of the portfo-lio and are well within the requirements of the regulations."

The benefits for business of going green usually referring to predictions of what the Chancellor will But if the figures produced last month by the Office for National Statistics are taken on board, green budgets could soon have an exclusively environmental meaning.

The ONS measured the impact of economic activity on the environment and natural resources, focusing on three areas; the cost of depleting North Sea oil and gas reserves. the atmospheric emissions of various industrial sectors and the amounts spent on cleaner technology. The research showed that electricity generation in 1993 contributed 1.5 per cent of GDP but proper cent of greenhouse gases and 44 per cent of acid rain. The initiative was broadly welcomed in principle, but opinion differed over the practicalities. Is it possible to attach a monetary value to environmental degradation? Should such statistics be incorporated within GDP calcula-

Then economists talk about tions or published alongside them?

ONS officials concluded that, while they had taken the first steps towards linking the national achave in store for us in November. . counts with environmental concerns, devising a single "green" measure of GDP required "political judgments" to be made.

Absolutely right. But this is something for the longer term. Until we have a more environmentally conscious business culture, debating the ins and outs of green accounting on such a large scale is really putting the cart before the horse. Most companies in the UK comply with environmental legislation; some are already going beyond the requirements of the law. Generally. however, we still lag behind our competitors in the US and Scandinavia in fostering environmental reporting and encouraging sustainability.

We need to make businesses more receptive to green ideas. The way to do this is to appeal to companies' self-interest - to prove that green business is good business. As consumers seem increasingly intolerant of firms with less than spotless environmental records, this can only continue to become an even bigger factor in determining competitive advantage.

Commercial regulations should also incentivise environmentally responsible behaviour. Rather than burdening business with additional red tape, environmental legislation must prompt fresh enterprise.

One issue we might start to address is that of contaminated land. Government could initiate a process whereby property developers paid for the assessment of a contaminated site and received a certification based on its condition. Subsequent clean-up measures could be recognised and the land awarded a more favourable grade. With a line drawn under previous use of the site and future liability restricted to the last certificate issued, a developer could then sell this improved land, perhaps buoyed by capital gains or

As the landfill tax coming into force next month demonstrates, disposing of waste ecologically is as much a vital issue as preventing the degradation of existing natural resources. Although the tax rate - at E2 a tonne for inert waste and E7 for active waste — is perhaps not as radical as one might have hoped, if we are at all serious about tackling the problem of waste, that rate should be increased progressively

At the Co-operatve Bank we have realised the importance of this issue, making it central to our four-point

mote environmental efficiency and sustainability. Aware that environmental criteria need to become part of our day-to-day decision-making. we have commissioned the National Centre for Business and Ecology to do a comprehensive environmental audit, which I'm sure will highlight areas for improvement.

As the financial suppliers of new businesses, banks have a role to play in "greening-up", though a survey of the 17 financial institutions in the FT-SE 100 found that only two produced a detailed environmental report, while a further four mentioned the environment in their annual report.

Should we be surprised by this? Probably not. But it is worrying when you reflect that managing environmental risk is becoming a significant factor in lending decisions. If banks fail to take a lead on this, can we really expect other companies to follow?

The Co-operative Bank is committed to environmental best practice, having contributed £1 million to set up the National Centre for Business and Ecology, which aims to provide an environmental service for the small and medium enterprise (SME) sector. Though vital to the UK economy, SMEs rarely have any environmental expertise and often feel the regulatory pinch. Research carried out by the bank suggests that 40-60 per cent of these firms have experienced pressures on their business on environmental matters. It is up to politicians and business leaders to raise awareness of the benefits of "going green". The example of a group in Sweden called The Natural Step is instructive. It has secured the support of scientists and business people for a programme to reduce waste and increase resource efficiency. A similar exercise in 'capacity building" would be valuable in Britain. Government can help green business to flourish. I believe it should cost more for companies to pollute than not to pollute. And with developments like the Private Finance Initiative and compulsory competitive tendering, the huge purchasing power of central and local government can be harnessed to stimulate environmental innovation and standards of green efficiency.

In a more radical direction, proposals advanced by the Institute for Public Policy Research - shifting the burden of taxation away from labour to the use of environmental resources — offer a starting point for drafting truly green budgets. Our approach should be that of the Clinton Administration when agreeing to commitments to cut pollution by greenhouse gases in July: "Sound policies pursued in the near term will allow us to avoid the prospect of truly draconian and economically disruptive policies in the future." Business ecology must be seen as an opportunity, not a threat. It represents the sea-change in business values since the 1980s and the way ahead for the next century. Once business culture and the tax system reflect the principles of green business, it will be much easier to calculate and appreciate "green GDP". ☐ The author is managing director of The Co-operative Bank

Samsung poised with rescue deal for Fokker

By OLIVER AUGUST

SAMSUNG, the South Korean industrial group, is set to buy Fokker, the Dutch aircraft builder that is in receivership. The move would save 300 jobs at Shorts of Belfast, which produces wings for Fokker's

The court-appointed receivers of the bankrupt Dutch planemaker said yesterday that they are locked in sales negotiations with Samsung on an exclusive basis.

Samsung Aerospace Industries has completed a business plan for Fokker and is conducting an audit of the company. The central issue in the negotiations is whether all parties concerned, including Dutch Government, banks, receivers and Stork, bought Fokker's service division, will agree to their roles as defined in the business plan. In a brief statement, Fokker said: "The focal point of this probe is the question whether all parties involved can agree with a business plan currently being finalised by Samsung." Samsung has had takeover talks on two earlier occasions. one before Fokker's collapse and one immediately after. The profitable maintenance and services arms, Fokker

On its Fokker 70 production line Shorts is employing 300 people who, the company said, will be kept on after the end of production of the 70-seater can be secured.

However, some of the job losses at Shorts may be offset by an increase in the workforce in other parts of the business arising from orders for new medium-sized executive jets, for which Shorts is supplying components.

Bombardier, the parent company of Shorts, announced the first 50 orders for the new Global Express jet last month which should create 450 jobs in the next 18 months.

Tom Cobleigh in possible bid talks

SHARES of Tom Cobleigh, the pub retail chain, jumped more than 10 per cent after the company revealed that it was in talks that may lead to a takeover. They closed up 24p at 236 p, valuing the company at £94 million. Tom Cobleigh owns 41 pubs, mainly in the Midlands and Yorkshire. Its shares have performed strongly since the company floated, priced at 150p, last November.

The company has been at the centre of bid rumours since European Acquisition Capital, which holds a 50 per cent stake, announced earlier this summer that it wanted to sell out. Speculation over the identity of the bidder has centred on Yates Brothers Wine Lodges which owns 50 branded wine lodges across the country. Yates shares rose 2 p to 366p. Alan Paul directors 'deceived banks'

A WORKING WEEK FOR: DANIEL HODSON

مكدا من الاصل

into the fresh territory of commodities

Tuesday ∨7 Wednesday Thursday ___ Friday

don International Financial Futures and Opwill become even larger on Monday, thanks to the takeover of the London

Commodities Exchange. It will be another feather in the cap for Daniel Hodson, chief executive of Liffe, and will take daily turnover at Liffe over an astonishing £150 billion per day.

For Hodson, 52, Monday will begin, much like any other working day, extremely early. If he denies being a fully fledged workaholic, he admits to coming close, setting off from his Sussex home early enough to start work by 7am. For him, the significance of Monday's merger with the LCE is not the growth in size - which will only be marginal, as the LCE's volumes average only 2.4 per cent of those of Liffe — but the chance to expand Liffe into the virgin territory of commodities. He agrees that Liffe is not the easiest of institutions for the general public to under-stand. The exchange's turnover is dauntingly large and the financial instruments traded — such as eurolira options and long gilt serial options — largely in-comprehensible to anyone outside the world of finance. Moreover, the method of trading, using a combination of high-tech wizardry and the hand-waving and bellowing of open outcry, is frankly bemusing. One thing he finds irritating is that when the London stock market falls, TV news producers often use footage of Liffe's trading floor. which is more visually stimulating than rows of equities salesmen sitting in bank trading rooms at terminals.

One advantage of the merger with the LCE will be that its business, trading futures and options on such everyday commodthe public feel more comfortable with the frantic activity of the brightly blazered, mainly young traders who work in Liffe's pits.

An important part of Hodson's job, and one that he enjoys, is to persuade people that derivatives are a good thing. City scandals, notably the collapse of Barings, can

THE huge Lon- make that difficult. The public perception outside the industry itself was tarnished by Barings, which was unfortunate," he says. It was not a big setback for Liffe as a business. "In the financial sector and the commercial sector, the press universally, and to their credit, never said using derivatives is a bad thing. This is exactly the opposite of what happened in America where there were big firms like Kodak saying we are never going to use derivatives again."

To rebuild the industry's public image, he likes to emphasise the role that derivatives play in things like pension fund management. He points out: The reason you can get a fixed-rate mortgage is that the providers can lay off the risks at exchanges like this."

Liffe was not directly involved in the Barings debacle, but when news of it first broke, Hodson, like many others in the City, experienced a few moments of pure fear. "I was at my older daughter Susannah's confirmation," he recalls. On reading the first Sunday newspaper report, he grabbed a phone: "I was able to get hold of the chief executive of the clearing house within nanoseconds to see what 6 The the overall position in London was and he was assumption able to reassure we make is me that it was nothing of any sig-nificance, but that EMU is going the problems were to happen 9 in Singapore and Japan." hindsight, he seems to have enjoyed the excitement of the immediate aftermath of the collapse. His role was mainly acting as a communication channel between the regulators in the UK and the markets and regulators in America: "Communication was very important to prevent rumours, counter-rumours, concerns.

"I was a minor player but one of the interesting things about this job is that you are in the arena and you do have a view of what is going on Before joining Liffe, Hodson, who was educated at Eton and Oxford before starting his career in banking, was finance director of Nationwide Building Society. When the Liffe job came up four years ago, he was attracted to it because "it was technical, involved managing people and trying to best optimise a very interesting and diverse group of people".

The job has proved to be as

Daniel Hodson believes that Liffe's "open outcry" trading -- with the hand-waving and bellowing of staff in colourful blazers -- is not without its advantages complex as he first imagined: "We have all the problems and challenges you find in a conventional business, but we are also a regulator and one of the half dozen key institutions in the City. We also have a very high international profile, as we are the second or third biggest exchange of our type in the world." The other two big exchanges are in the Chicago Board of Trade — unquestionably the largest — and the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. Working for an exchange that is owned and used by the members responsible to the board and we have a structure that is not so different from a regular business. But we have 200 shareholders who are physically here, and they take a very keen interest in every major strategic decision." Once strategy is agreed, however, the members let the board take care of running the exchange. The enormous growth in volumes traded at the exchange means that he and the board constantly look ahead: "Most organisations are about 75 per cent steady state and about 25 per cent change management. We are exactly the opposite. My colleagues and I spend the bulk of time working on change." Preparing the market for European monetary union has been particularly challenging. In March, Liffe listed two contracts, sterling and the euromark, for a delivery month after the putative short amount of time, we had to come up with a policy." The decision was that the contracts would become euro currency contracts if the euro then existed. It was not a move destined to please Euro-sceptics, but, Hodson says: "We are not paid to have political

unanticipated and, in a relatively views, we are paid to make planning assumptions. The planning assumption we make is that EMU will happen, and that while sterling is more likely to be out than in, it may be in. We must be prepared for that too."

Hodson and his colleagues must also ensure that, particularly in the important bund futures and options market. Frankfurt never gets an edge. The fact that, financially, London is the Eur pean capital is key. But he is also convinced that trading by open outery is Liffe's main advantage.

impossible to get the sound and the feel and the smell in the same way". Also, he says: "When markets change violently in one direction or the other, electronically one side of the market tends to disappear. In an open outcry market, with 150 people standing round, you can always get a price." In the long run, electronics are bound to get better and, within a decade, he expects to see a "virtual reality" market in operation, with virtual trading pits. Work does not consume all of Hodson's energy. "I regard myself very much as a family man. My two main interests in life are my family and my job and when I'm not here, I'm there," he says. He has two daughters at boarding school: Susannah, 16, and Emma, 14. "Seeing them is an important part of my life," he says, but adds with a hint of regret: "The demands of the job are such that workaholic. I don't quite achieve that, but there are long hours and it is quite compulsive."

With his daughters usually away at school, he and his wife Diana live in Sussex in a small 350-yearold manor house on the South Downs. Commuting is not something he resents: "Being on the train and having an hour to myself where I can do work uninterrupted is a great bonus." Beyond his work and family, he admits he has little time left for diversions: "It is sad in a way, but I used to sing quite a bit in choral societies. Music and opera are interests. I also have a lovely garden: I'd like to spend more time gardening." Much time with his family is spent in the holiday house in Greece that he and his wife had built. He is never away long, though, and, in spite of the occasional traumas of his job, he always returns to London enthusiasm.

"Over the years, we have moved from Liffe taking off as a DC3 in 1982 and we're now talking about something which resembles a stretched 747A, with all the difference in technology, but we've never landed. It keeps a lot of people extremely busy.

A few soup-spotted ties are a small price to pay for this ingenious piece of artistic engineering. commissioned by BT through Art BT rings the changes by opting for the work of an emerging artist, says Joanna Pitman

Rickett Street, southwest London. The piece, titled Big Blue, is the handiwork of Simon Lofting, the young British artist and a recent graduate of the Three Dimensional Design course at Ravensbourne College, Kent, and of Middlesex University's Fine Arts degree course. To those who haven't seen a mobile since they were last nappyclad in a cot, Big Blue looks half like the skeletal wing of a prehis-toric bird and half like a series of coat-hangers strung perilously together and balanced in the middle by a giant grapefruit. In fact the mobile, or "mobile sculpture" as we should call it, has far more profound and glamorous antecedents. "It is a model of the co-operation between different elements and opposing forces," says Lofting, "allowing infinite variations of position within fixed parameters.

There is unity through balance ... This is freeform precision engineering", as Lofting calls it. "You can't force balance, you have to find it. It's not like conquering a block of stone. Balance and equilibrium are obviously crucial to the piece. If you took away one part of the sculpture the whole thing would collapse." Lofting was given a fairly detailed brief by British Telecom. 'The piece had to reflect the greenbelt location of the office and to give an impression of the positive and progressive nature of the Lofting has been fascinated by mobiles and kites for many years but has been making large-scale mobiles since 1992, having studied the works of Alexander Calder, the man credited with the invention of the mobile in the late 1930s. BT had decided that it wanted a large mobile to fill the space created by the double-storey atrium above its cafeteria.

Lofting's creation was chosen largely for its delicacy, its open "no tricks honesty" and its sensi-tivity to the environment. "We have a preference in BT to use the work of emerging artistic talent, rather than to invest in established names," says Malcolm Brown of BT's design unit. "We are delighted with the results. The mobile has great poise and adds a central focus for the building."

The FT-SE 100 index had opened on a firm note, reflecting a 17-point rise in the Dow Jones industrial average overnight. But the real thrust came later in the day, bringing it within 30 points of its target before finishing 35.3 points up at a record 3,967.9. That stretches the lead on the week to almost 75 points.

London was again bolstered by Wall Street where investors were quick to respond to the latest retail sales numbers. The 0.2 per cent rise in August was less than many of them had anticipated and takes away much of the pressure for a rise in US interest rates.

Last night brokers were urging clients to hang on for the ride. They said stock shortages would continue to result in share prices being driven higher. By the close of business less than 700 million shares had changed hands.

The food retailers moved against the trend, continuing to lose ground as the food price war designed to grab market share in the run-up to Christmas gathered pace. Sainsbury, down 4p at 38212p. has been advertising price cuts in the press this week. It follows similar moves by Asda, ½ p lighter at 108p, and Tesco, down 5p at 306p, before interim figures next week.

British Aerospace continued to respond to this week's profits news with a rise of Hp at £10.622. The engineering team at Panmure Gordon, the broker, says that even taking a conservative approach to prospects the shares are worth E11.50. This in turn drove Rolls-Royce 8p higher at Panmure also likes FKI, unchanged at 205p, but has put Babcock International, lp lighter at 76p, and British Steel, 24 p steadier at 193p, on its weekly sell list.

Railtrack continues to go from strength to strength, new high of 288p on turnover of nine million shares. Institutional investors have been attracted by talk of the group's hidden property assets. SBC Warburg, the broker, is said to be a buyer of the shares, which were floated in the summer at

Tesco, which reports next week, was down 5p to 306p

Salomon Brothers, the US securities house, urged clients to switch into Scottish & Newcastle, 2½ p better at 680p.

The banks extended this week's gains, prompted by a number of brokers' recommendations. Barclays added a further 4p to 946p, HSBC 25p to £11.89, LLoyds TSB 7p to 39lp, Standard Chartered 7טְל to 703 p. and Abbey

Business Systems Danka jumped another 272p to 6822p as the market continued to reflect on this week's Eastman Kodak deal.

Tomkins, the guns to buns group, rose 10p to 272p after issuing a bullish statement about current trading. Greg Hutchings, chairman, told the annual meting that order books were up on last year

British Biotech fell 10p to 192's p after reaching a 326p high this year. There is talk that tests being carried out with Glaxo Wellcome on a new anti-inflammatory drug may be halted. The shares also continue to suffer from the fallout over the Morgan Grenfell affair, whose funds hold 10.6 per cent of the company.

National 3p to 606p. Brokers and that the food side of the have also taken a fancy to National Westminster, 7p better at 678p. They say the shares are the cheapest in the sector, having been left behind

RMC Group, which is reporting next week, finished 165p better at Ell.815. The figures are expected to show a sharp fall in half-year profits, which have been hit by a combination of poor weather and the recession in Europe.

Meanwhile, Old English Pubs, which is listed on the Alternative Investment Market, is spending almost £3 million on five more pub restaurants and hotels. The shares rose 8p to 154p.

Matthew Clark, the drinks group, showed signs of bottoming out, ending 214p higher at 365p. But the shares are still nursing a fall of more than 300p on the week after issuing a warning that sales had been hit by competition from "alcopops".

Stanley Leisure was boosted by a bullish statement at the annual meeting about current trading. The shares rose 4p at 4952 p.

A four-fold increase in firsthalf profits to £1 million and growing confidence by the new management about the future lifted Liberty 15p to 435p in a thin market. The shares are now trading at their highest level for three rise in US retail sales was warmly received and provided the main thrust to bond prices now that the need for a rise in American interest rates appears to have passed.

Sales of the remaining tranches of index-linked stock were supplied and further issues can be expected by the Bank of England next week. The December series of the Long Gilt jumped El³32 to finish at El07²⁹32 as the num-

THE Railtrack privatisation looks like one of the most outrageous giveaways in a history of generously priced asset sales. However, this time, the Labour Party may hesitate before delivering its usual tirade about the family

Sold at a partly paid 190p, complete with dire warnings from Labour's transport spokesman about taking Railtrack back into public ownership, the shares drifted for two months at the £2 level. However, at the end of July, the price perked up and has continued to rise to its current level of just under £3.

What happened? On July 25, Clare Short was sacked from her job as Shadow Transport Secretary and replaced by the more malleable Andrew Smith. Treasury officials must wonder how much of the £600 million gain to investors would have accrued to taxpayers had Ms Short not been rattling her sword. Still. there are other reasons for optimism. Market speculation about property profits is premature - a major scheme would take years to complete. The upside at Railtrack is about reducing the burden of track maintenance which cost £1.2 billion last year. Work is contracted out to 13 businesses, subject to highly priced agreements that expire over the next three to five years. Competing track maintenance companies have every incentive to seek contract extensions in return for lower prices and Railtrack is rumoured to be enjoying some success in getting costs down. Having been one of the highest-yielding utilities, Railtrack is now one of the more expensive with a yield of 6 per cent on the fully paid shares. The scope for reducing costs is large, but a good bit is now in the price.

Oil

OIL companies are quietly thanking Saddam Hussein for what should be an exceptionally profitable year. Estimates of average oil prices for 1996 are now heading north of $19 per barrel compared with forecasts of $17 in January, but no one expects the party to last long.

The threat of more bombing raids puts the timing of oil-for-food sales by Iraq well into next year - not least, because the American elections rule out any possibility of Washington approving earlier oil exports, even were Saddam Hussein to wave a white flag from his bunker. Second-guessing the timing of Iraqi exports has provoked a shortfall in inventories and a huge backwardation in oil prices. Delayed purchasing by re-finers and stockholders - in future is secure even if it fails. as the stadium will remain the largest venue of its type in London and continue to attract big events. Wembley has other sources of income and the company points out that the North London landmark contributes only about 36 per cent of total turnover. However, the stadium and the supporting complex provided closer to half of total operating profits. As always, this is a share for investors who want to believe in the Wembley dream.

sector is riding high on a massive increase in investment in new venues. Cobleigh itself invested some £14 million in the year to March and over £20 million in the previous two years, building up its chain. Such high rates investment and virtually nil depreciation of the assets acquired raises questions about the sustainability of such values. Unless profit growth accelerates, the re-

Nevertheless, a peaking market can still excite professionals. In July Whitbread paid a hefty £133 million for the Pelican restaurant chain. Cobleigh is currently priced at 232p, some 25 times forecast earnings, and a figure that inclu share in goodwill. Willingness to pay such a premium for goodwill suggests a company unable to build or expand its own brands. Whoever the buyer, take the money, not the shares.

Societies fight it out over which looks the best

Sara McConnell asks accountants to assess the real worth of politicians' promises to cut income tax

Voters lap up the £8bn tax duel

ohn Major and Tony Blair locked horns on tax this week, both holding out the prospect of lower tax bills for millions of people as the election campaign got into its autumn stride.

At the same time Labour accused the Tories of welshing on previous commitments to cut tax, while denying reports that it was planning to introduce a new 50 per cent top rate for those earning £100,000 or more.

Labour says its priority is to cut the lower rate of tax from its present 20 per cent to 10 per cent in the long term, in order to reduce the tax bills of the low-paid. The Tories are committed to reducing the standard rate of tax by 4 per cent to 20 per cent. Each proposal would cost the Treasury an estimated £8 billion.

Would you be better off under Labour or the Tories if both parties actually delivered their promises? Figures calculated for The Times by KPMG, the chartered accountant, show that cutting the standard rate of tax to 20 per cent would give the biggest boost to the incomes of the vast majority of taxpayers, particularly lower earners. Cutting the lower rate band would have less impact.

According to KPMG, anyone with taxable income of £20,000 would immediately find themselves paying 13 per cent less — £3,247 instead of their present bill of £3,740 - if the standard rate was cut to 20p in the pound. Under Labour's plans, their bill would be just over 10 per cent lower at £3,350 (see graphic).

Those with taxable income of £40,000 would benefit less because a proportion of their income is taxed at the higher rate. But they would still gain by nearly 10 per cent under the Tory plan. Labour's cut would benefit them by slightly less than 4 per cent. On an income of £60,000, the proposed cut in the standard rate would reduce the tax bill by just under 5 per cent, while the cut in the lower rate will leave just over 2 per cent extra in the kitty. High earners on E100,000 gain the smallest advan-tage under both Labour and Tory proposals. Either way, the reduction in the tax bill would be less than 2 per cent, with a cut in the standard rate of tax marginally more beneficial. Accountants argue that if Labour and the Tories are serious about cutting tax bills, the best way is to raise tax thresholds dramatically, by far more than the rate of inflation. Thresholds normally rise by roughly the rate of inflation in the annual Budget, although in each of the past four years selected bands have been frozen, effectively raising taxes slightly by the back door.

aising the initial tax threshold significantly would take many people out of the tax about £30,000 of taxable income would also benefit from the raising of the threshold at which they start paying higher-rate tax.

Maurice Fitzpatrick, tax manager at Chantrey Vellacott, the chartered accountant, calculates that for the same £8 billion, the threshold at which people start paying tax could be raised by £1,200. At current levels this would mean everyone could earn at least £5,000 before paying any tax.

Mr Fitzpatrick said: "Cutting the lower rate of tax to 10 per cent may help the lowest paid but will not take a single person out of tax altogether." Nearly a quarter of all taxpayers, taxpayers, while only 2.2 million pay tax at the higher rate. Simply cutting tax rates also does not remove the extra 10 per cent tax levied on all earnings between lower and upper limits (currently £61 and £455 a week) to pay for National Insurance. This eighs most heavily on those earning less than £23,000 a year because they are effectively paying an extra 10 per cent in tax on most of their salary.

But Labour will be wary of alienating middle-income voters by calling for a redistribution of National Insurance contribution costs. Its illfated plan to abolish the upper earnings limit on National Insurance in 1992 was instrumental in losing Labour that general election, many say.

Labour says it has no plans in its manifesto to change National Insurance contributions. It also insists that it has no plans to raise the top rate of tax to 50 per cent on earnings of over £100,000 a year. But it is cons 18.2 million people are basic-rate the wealthy to shelter their money from tax, as an alternative to raising rates. The top rate of tax was cut in one fell swoop from 60 per cent to 40 per cent by Nigel Lawson in 1988 and any attempt to raise it would lay Labour open to accusations that it was penalising success and enterprise.

ne alternative under investigation is to introduce a US-style requirement for everyone to pay a set minimum amount of tax in a regime with more limited tax breaks than the existing system. The US has had such a system since 1986.

Known as alternative minimum tax (AMT), it operates alongside the mainstream tax regime, with its own rules. Individuals on the AMT regime pay a flat rate of 26 per cent (28 per cent on $175,000 or above taxable income). It is up to taxpayers to assess whether they must file returns under AMT. Detailed statutes set out lower rate of 20 per cent. A further ways of reducing opportunities for who comes under the AMT regime.

$100,000 fine and/or up to five years in jail. But Charles Merriman. partner in charge of Ernst & Young's US and international desk, gives warning that the system "doesn't add anything significant other than a

AMT is complex to understand and administer, says Mr Merriman, and introducing a similar system here would compound any difficulties taxpayers face working out their. tax under the new self-assessment regime starting in 1997. The Inland Revenue has already been forced to simplify its proposals dramatically.

Turning off shareholders

ony Blair has noticed that seven million trade unionists are a minority, to judge by the stagemanaged rows with the TUC this week. You might think he would still woo the half of union members who did not vote Labour in 1992. If Mr Blair is that keen to cosy up to Middle England, though, he should note that there are at least two million more private shareholders than unionists, and act accordingly.

The overwhelming majority of us own shares in privatised utilities, long the focus of Labour's vitriol. And that does not count all those whose pensions depend on them. Utility shareholders are not a voting bloc, any more than union members or the many who feature on both lists. Investors are also consumers, whose economic interest always outweighs that of savers on a crude cash calculus. As shareholders, however, many of these eight million plus people are fed up. Most fed up by far are the two biggest groups: the 2.3 million of us with shares in British Telecom and the 1.7 million individual investors in British Gas. Our political favours are up for grabs.
Those who have held British Gas shares since privatisation a decade ago - nearly all the private shareholders have had a raw deal. They would have nearly twice as much money if they had invested in the share average. Those who bought BT shares in the third tranche have done worst of all. In each case, the losses of the past three years have little to do with trading, everything to do with regulatory change that has needed to be backed specifically by government action. Once these utilities were sold to investors, to establish a stable business background and a fair balance of interests, policy was hi-jacked by economic theorists, investors were demonised as impersonal rentiers and regulation was stuck into maximum improbability drive. If Tories have lost any call on the favours of the eight million, Labour seems to have little interest in them. It is still determined to mount a levy across the board, not just on electricity and water companies, and is wedded to strengthening the "consumer" interest. British Gas is the pre-election test. As this week's half-year figures again show, the company is suffering heavily from the take-or-pay contracts signed before the Government changed the rules and took away much of its market. Early results of domestic competition show that most customers were satisfied with British Gas and rightly have no truck with what they fear may be fly-

by-night foreign competitors. The South West, where water bills have soared while gas and power bills have fallen, was an odd place to pilot competition. BG shows every sign of being able to compete with its pricing hands tied behind its back, not least with new services like the Goldfish credit card. Each customer lost to British Gas is still a little triumph for the regulator, a bigger loss for shareholders on those take-or-pay contracts taken to meet statutory obligations. In such circumstances, the huge revenue cuts demanded from Transco, the pipeline system that accounts for most of BG's assets. the bulk of employees and the dividend, are a socialistic attempt to destroy shareholders' interests before BG splits in self-defence next spring. BG shares now yield 9.4 per cent on a shaky dividend. The regulator has managed to raise the cost of equity capital by a third. making a private enterprise operation unviable for customers in the long term.

The company can — and must appeal to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. But it knows there is a powerful bureaucratic solidarity between the MMC and regulators. Only a change in the political climate is likely to embolden the MMC to take a radically more sensible line than Ofgas. Maybe Labour or the Liberal Democrats will attack Ofgas for being unfair to investors as well as endanger ing jobs and service standards. Maybe the Tories will at last stand up for the millions they have served so badly. Maybe no one wants our votes.

What are share-ex-change schemes?

Share-exchange schemes allow you to sell unwanted shares at a discount to a fund manager in exchange for taking an investment in a unit trust or investment trust. Most United Kingdom fund managers offer them; however, all have slightly different terms, conditions and costs.

Which shares can be used in share-exchange

Most schemes will ac-A cept the shares from the FT-SE 100 companies. Some, such as the scheme operated by M&G, will have a list of 100 shares which they will exchange for nothing. Acrimony among the acronyms nvestors in the Kleinwort Benson European Privatisa-tion Trust (Kepit) are being assailed once more with pages of claim and counter-claim from Kepit and its unwelcome bidder, TR European Growth Trust (Treg). In this war of acronym against acronym, nothing is abbreviated. In the interest of small investors, both sides should now clarify their proposals, making clear when a statement is a pledge, and when it is just an estimate.

For example, in its latest sally, Treg says that it should be able to realise 97.3p per share for investors. However, if the trust emerges triumphant and executes its planned sale of the whole Kepit portfolio, the unpredictable nature of the stock market means that no one can exactly anticipate

Meanwhile, with opinion growing that the Kepit plan (see page 33) may now win the day, investors in Treg should be aware of their unwilling involvement in these noisy proceedings. Henderson Touche Remnant, Treg's management company, has not agreed to indemnify Treg for the costs of an unsuccessful bid. Treg, or rather its shareholders, will foot the seven-figure bill for the battle.

Since Henderson Touche Remnant would have gained from victory, by acquiring £500 million worth of extra funds to manage, it should also share in the costs of failure.

Better for whom?

The Personal Investment Authority (PIA), the City watchdog that guards over financial advisers and insurance companies, has this week proposed the streamlining of some investor protection procedures. The body claims that customers are being deterred from making financial arrangments by the methods used to elicit details about their circumstances. Some simplification of the regulations would be welcome. But more is afoot here than cutting down paperwork.

In this instance, the PIA is speaking less on behalf of investors than its members who, it seems, are worried that safeguards are costing them business. Note, for example, that the PIA suggests that the term "best advice", a central tenet of the current system, could be replaced with a spectrum" of recommendations, including "not unsuitable" and "most suitable". What a selling opportunity that

The events at Morgan Grenfell, where one fund manager was apparently allowed to follow his fancy, unfettered by the rules, have spread alarm among investors. The PIA should now be concerned with their welfare. Its members can take care of themselves.

Selective cuts

The Bristol & West Building Society is also busy with some streamlining, supposedly in the interests of its members (see page 32). But its savers have already guessed that the alterations being made to the society's Select account are to the advantage of the Bristol & West, not the customer. Holders are to be deprived of certain benefits which made the Select a useful combination of current and savings account. B&W customers must be hoping that these petty restrictions are not a foretaste of what life will be like next year when the society becomes a subsidiary of the Bank of Ireland.

Tipping the scales

illy Connolly, in flowing robes, is now to be seen on Bour TV screens, revealing that the secret of life is the goldfish. The baffling pronouncements of the Glaswegian comedian may achieve what plain-speaking American card companies have, so far, failed to do. That is to highlight the exorbitant rates of interest that the British are prepared to pay for their credit cards.

To date, Barclaycard, whose Annual Percentage Rate, or true rate, is 22.30 per cent, has not suffered unduly at the hands of American invaders, offering UK cards with rates of 14.9 per cent, or thereabouts.

The Goldfish credit card is a joint venture between British Gas and HFC. Goldfish's APR is 18.9 per cent, the rate also chosen by the new Which? card, and thus perhaps seen by British Gas as politically correct. This rate may not be low enough to shake the unswerving loyalty of Barclaycard's eight million customers. However, the new 7.9 per rate Co-op card could cause Barclaycard holders to ask why their bank makes borrowing three times as expensive. Barclays should respond not by spending more on advertisements, starring that other funny man Rowan Atkinson, but by reducing its rate.

Guaranteed returns to tempt the once-bitten

The promise of guaranteed returns has become even more alluring in the wake of the losses suffered by the thousands of investors in Morgan Grenfell's and Kleinwort Benson's European funds.

Ever eager to spot a marketing opportunity, and hoping to mop up some of the £250 million of disaffected investors' money which has left Morgan Grenfell, two companies this week decided to launch personal equity plans which will guarantee the return of capital. Barclays and Marks & Spencer unveiled fiveyear guaranteed Peps with potential returns based on rises in the UK stock market, while HSBC relaunched its Pep, which also offers a similer type of guarantee. These plans are aimed to appeal to risk-averse investors who are willing to gamble the interest they would have earned on the money by leaving it in a building society. As interest rates are only about 3 per cent at the moment, the index only has to grow by a small amount annually to outstrip building society returns. Micropal says £1,000 invested in the FT-SE 100 index five years ago would now be worth £1,536, while £1,000 in a higher-rate building society account would be worth £1,208.

Legal & General already has a five-year guaranteed stock market product, which it launched in 1993. It now has £87 million under management in the fund from 18,000 investors. Its analysis of the performance of the stock market versus building society investments over 19 five-year periods shows that the market outperformed in 18 cases. Barclays was first off the blocks this week with its Pep. It guarantees that if in five years the value of the investment is less than the original amount invested, then it will make up the difference. The money is invested in the shares of the UK's top 100 companies.

As the product is a Pep, income is reinvested tax-free and any capital gains are free from tax. The Pep carries a 5 per cent initial charge, which means if you choose to invest the full year's Pep allowance of £6,000 only £5,700 will actually be invested. The fund also carries a l per cent annual management charge, a £72 annual fee and minimum investment is £1,000, while the maximum sum nvestors who choose to withdraw some or part of their investment before the end of the five years will be subject to a withdrawal fee. This starts at 5 per cent in the first year of investment and drops to I per cent in year five. Grant Philips, the managing director of Barclays Unicorn, said: "The public's confidence in unit trusts may have been knocked by recent developments in the industry. This only increases our resolve to continue to introduce prudent products which encourage the confidence of savers." Marks & Spencer's Guaranteed Capital Plan runs along the same lines. It, however, carries no initial charge, but a higher Pep plan charge of 1.76 per cent of the value of the fund. It has no redemption penalties for those who cash-in early. It also has a much higher minimum investment of £3,000. The offer on it is open until the end of October.

HSBC's Pep, the PEP Plus H, will offer investors all the capital growth of the index over the five-year period, plus a 25 per cent bonus of the growth achieved. If the market falls, the product will aim to pay back the capital, but in the strictest definition of the word, this is not guaranteed. It explains that it may not be able to return money to investors. It says: "In our opinion, this risk is minimal but it is drawn to your attention."

They are not some new form of coinage, but instead are the symbol of a credit card from a joint venture company between British Gas and HFC Bank. Although goldfish are scaly and cold-blooded, according to the agency Wolff Olins, which came up with the brand, the great British public is charmed by them.

Mike Parsons, managing director of Goldbrand, the joint venture company, said: In Eastern culture, the Goldfish symbolises wealth and prosperity." The card does have a slightly lower annual interest rate at 18.9 per cent than many other credit cards, which on average offer interest rates of about 22 per cent.

However, the Goldfish is a long way from offering the lowest rate on the market. RBS Advanta and the People's Bank of Connecticut offer cards with rates of 15.6 per cent and 14.4 per cent respectively. The launch of the Goldfish sparked the immediate release of a new credit card from the Co-op with a market-beating rate of 7.9 per cent.

This rate will be held until April next year, when it rises to 10.9 per cent. This still represents the cheapest rate on the market.

Although the rate on the Goldfish is not the lowest on the market, it claims that most people will qualify for the new card, unlike most low interest cards where you need a higher

According to Goldbrand, using its card in comparison with using a card with a 22 per

The new company also claims that the card could be better value-formoney than the 14.4 per cent People's Bank of Connecticut card, when the Goldfish lovalty programme is taken into account. Without the loyalty scheme, the US card is about £15 a year cheaper than the Goldfish. With the loyalty scheme, the Goldfish is about £4 a year cheaper. The Co-op Card can offer even bigger savings than the British Gas card. For example, the cost of borrowing £1,000 over six months at 7.9 per cent is about ESO cheaper than using a Goldfish.

The Credit Card Research Group believes that any war among issuers will be fought over the interest rate, rather than over any individual loyalty scheme. It points out that the relevance of interest rates may be overplayed because the majority of credit card holders managed to settle their

Sara McConnell on why a pension must be taken ten years early

arly retirement and re-dundancy are becoming unpleasant facts of life for thousands of workers across the country as budget cuts bite and new demands on time and facilities bring increased stress.

But the pensions system makes little allowance for anyone not staying the full course. On the contrary, such people are finding that inflexibie rules are forcing them into accepting reduced retirement

Grahame Leon-Smith, a former headmaster, of Ottershaw Park, Surrey, writes:

"Early in 1992, I was contacted by the Prudential regarding the Department for Education and Science-approved AVC scheme for teachers and decided to invest in it. In September 1992, at the age of 51. I was made compulsorily redundant from my post as headmaster. I was unsure of my future and therefore asked the Prudential to place the accumulated fund on a high-interest deposit account until I could decide precisely what to do In October 1994 the Prudential wrote asking me to buy an annuity. I was not prepared to do so because at the age of 53 it was impossible for me to purchase an annuity which would provide me with a reasonable pension. I wrote to the Teachers Pensions Agency [which now approves the Prudential AVC pointing out that at no time was I informed by the Prudential or the Education Department that I would have to buy an annuity within six months

Trapped by the rules: Grahame Leon-Smith is still working and does not want a pension yet

if I had to retire early, nor can I find any reference to this in the documentation. I am currently working as an educational consultant and do not wish to retire.

I do not need the annuity at this time and I wish to purchase it when I reach my normal retirement age of 65 (or earlier if I so decide). I understood the rules had been changed to give policyholders the right to decide when to buy an annuity and I would want when, as you say, you will be to take advantage of this."

Weekend Money replies: "The problem with the pen-sions system is that it assumes you will work until you are 65 > able to buy a big enough annuity for a reasonable retirement income. Unfortunately any deviation from this life pattern can be severely financially punished. AVCs used to top-up an employer's pension scheme are deemed to be part of the main pension, though in your case the AVC is managed by the Pru on behalf of the TPA. if you retire early for any reason and take your main pension, as you have, you must take your AVC fund as well. This means buying an annuity within six months. Your main teacher's pension is based on your final salary. As part of your redundancy deal, your employer boosted your pension to the level it would have been at if you had continued working ten more years. Your employer, not you, bears the extra cost of this. But your AVC pension is based on contributions and operates under different rules. The Pru is sympathetic but

Steve Bee, head of pensions, said: You are obliged to take the annuity. Revenue rules are quite clear. This should have been explained to you at the time.' The Pru is investigating your complaint that you were not told about the annuity. Mr Bee argues, however, that you were given a generous deal by your employer. What you have lost on the AVC you would have more than gained on the main pension.'

The only way to have avoid-ed the problem would have been to have deferred your main pension, and thus your

As you rightly say, new rules introduced last year allow retired people to put off buying an annuity until they can get a reasonable rate or until they are 75. But these rules do not apply to AVCs."

want only savers, not spenders. Hence the trend of offering a relatively attractive rate for so called instant-access accounts - but with harsh penalties for withdrawals.

Customers are angry at the changes to Bristol & West's instant-access Select Account. From October 1 there will a charge for withdrawals in accounts with a balance below £500. No new direct debit and standing orders will be allowed on accounts under £2,000. Customers with balances below £2,000 will no longer get cheque books, and the bill payment facility ends.

The society reasons, in a letter to accountholders, that reducing the Select Account facilities will "make more time available to improve our service to you" since it will now be able to concentrate on the three main areas of mortgages, savings and investments".

It is a classic case of rationalisation that goes with takeovers and conversions. From next summer B&W will be owned by the Bank of Ireland, though it will retain a separate identity.

"We would like people to use Select as a savings account rather than a day-to-day transaction account. We have never positioned it as a current account," said B&W. However, if you want to save rather than spend, you could get a much better rate of interest elsewhere, even from other B&W accounts. But if you want to move from the Select Account into a competitor's higher-paying account, you lose your merger bonus. "Clearly the Bristol & West has no interest in retaining customer loyalty," said Times reader Paul Holmer. "This is

Other building societies have come up with deterrents for withdrawals from instantaccess accounts. Alliance & Leicester's Prime Deposit allows two withdrawals per month and then charges 60p for each cash withdrawal and £1 for each cheque if the balance falls below £1,000 the charges were imposed five months after the launch of the product. The Bank of Scotland's Savings similarly comes with a £3 a month fee if the balance goes below £50. Other better-paying cheque accounts simply insist on a higher opening - and therefore running - balance. The new Leeds & Holbeck Premier Cheque has a £1,500 minimum balance. The Halifax Asset Reserve demands a E5.000 balance.

The Woolwich this week has come up with a postal account that gives a whole new meaning to 60 days' notice. The Postal 60 Account pays competitive rates of interest from 5 per cent gross on the minimum £2,500 to 6.5 per cent on £100,000 or over. The "60" bit would normally indi-cate the notice period for such an account. But with this product it means loss of interest. You can have one withdrawal a year instantly between £500 and £10,000.

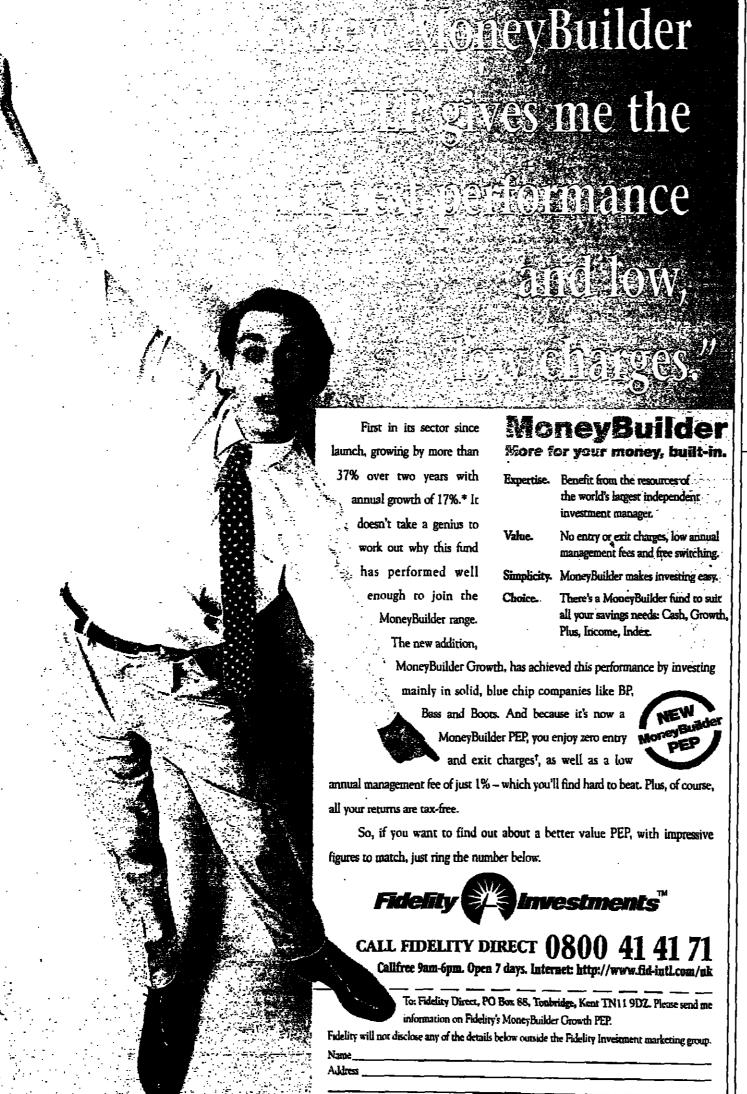

ny further withdrawals lose 60 days' interest This is not designed as an instant-access account but as a long-term, postal savings account," said the Woolwich. The Lambeth has also redefined 30 days' notice. You would expect to give 30 days' notice to withdraw cash. But with the Postal 30 you lose half the interest during the notice period.

The providers say you can get your money if you really need it and they can only offer high rates if they lock savers in. The message is clear - always read the small print on withdrawals. If you think you will want to get at your cash, be aware of the penalties. Banks too are rethinking epit is once more dag-gers drawn with Treg. Those familiar with these unlovely acronyms will know that there has been a resumption in the hostilities between the Kleinwort Benson European Privatisation Investment Trust (Kepit) and its unwelcome bidder Touche Remnant European Growth trust (Treg).

This week, the Kepit board has unveiled a joint venture with M&G, the unit trust group, whereby poor-per-forming kepit would be broken up. The immediate result was harsh words from the Henderson Touche Remnant's TG European Growth trust (Treg) which is offering £500 million for Kepit. We explain the developments.

What are the terms of the Kepit deal?

A Shareholders will be able to swap Kepit holdings for either units in a new Kleinwort Benson European Privatisation trust, or in M&G Europe & General, an existing unit trust. Investors who want cash can switch into Kleinwort's Money Market trust and then immediately liquidate their holdings. A combination of all three is possible. Shane Ross, Kepit chairman, said the board chose the M&G deal because it was the most attractive. But some cynics have pointed out the past relationship between Kleinwort and M&G. Kleinwort once held a big M&G stake. Others saw the arrangement as a face-saving operation for Kleinwort Benson Investment Management, Kepit's manager, enabling it to continue to earn management fees from the new European Privatisation unit trust, and so compensating for the loss of the large income it has always derived from Kepit.

How does this arrangement compare with the Touche Remnant bid and the proposals from other fund

About ten fund manage-ment groups, including Barings, Flemings and Guinness Flight have also submitted plans for Kepit's future. Provided they give their consent, their schemes will be disclosed to Kepit shareholders later this months, accomoanying the full details of the KBIM and M&G deal.

Guinness Flight has said this week that if shareholders cent Kenit's proposal, it will opportunity to invest in its Who is offering the best deal, Kepit or Treg?

The final privatisation under the current Parliament will make its debut this month, when AEA Technology, part of the Atomic Energy Authority until recently, is floated.

The privatisation is expected to be one of the more difficult to get off the ground, because there is no similar company on the market with which to compare it and recent improvements in the company's balance sheet are attributed to cost-cutting, not sales growth. In addition, anything connected with nuclear power is diffi-

What does the company do?

It is described as a science and engineering group. Its activities include decommissioning nuclear reactors, developing better batteries for portable telephones and monitoring air quality. aside for private investors. Instead of embarking on an intensive marketing campaign to attract the ordinary punter. AEA is going after the more sophisticated investor. In other words, it is seeking to be attractive to investors who already have a portfolio of shares and are confident buyers and sellers.

The bulk of the AEA shares - about 80 per cent - will be placed with instututions. Another 10 per cent has been earmarked for the company's employees. Employees will be given £160 of free shares and will get extra free shares if they invest in the company.

How attractive is the offer?

Andrew Couch, head of Guinness Flight's Privatisation Fund notes that AEA has big growth potential but with 21 operating companies in niche businesses, it is difficult to predict how it will fare. "On the plus side, about 46 per cent of its sales are nonnuclear related, and there is scope to improve the performance of AEA's consultancy business. On the down side, about 54 per cent of the business is exposed to nuclear technology of some sort, and government contracts, in particular, are in decline. AEA is in a position where non-nuclear revenue needs to outstrip nuclear, but they are in the right areas: about 24 per cent of revenues come from decommissioning. There are no big nuclear liability issues like British Energy." He thinks the pricing is about right.

Time to change the high society league?

The last year has been a tumultuous one for the building society movement. Like so many skittles, five of the top 20 societies have fallen for the attractions of flotation on the stock

The trend towards demutualisation has been matched by an equal but opposite pull in the direction of greater mutuality, with many societies firmly pinning their colours to the mast by enhancing mortgage and savings rates for their members.

Some of this upheaval is reflected in the annual survey of the top 20 building societies by UBS, the broker. The report analyses the performance of the top societies using key factors such as profitability, capital strength, market share, arrears, efficiency and growth. It then comes up with a league table of creditworthiness.

In the past, the table has been used by individuals and institutions as a guide to where to find a home for their money. Now, those on the mutual side of the fence claim that the league table is nonsense because those societies keen to give back more profits to their members will look weaker than those societies hoping to increase their profits to critic of the methods used in the report is Brian Davis, the chief executive of Nationwide.

He says: "It really is a nonsense,

Abbey National, managed to jump II places up the table, mainly by improving its arrears position, and by increasing the profit margin on savings. Two of the other biggest climbers in this year's league were the Britannia and West Bromwich building societies. Both jumped six places. Britannia was able to achieve its increase in profitability by decreasing arrears and by buying up the Lloyds Bowmaker mortgage portfolio. Next year, the society expects a 40 per cent fall in profits because of the package of mutual benefits it is offering members. The West Bromwich Building Society, believed to be ripe for takeover, managed to increase its profitability through the purchase of the AXA Equity & Law mortgage book.

The biggest faller was the Woolwich Building Society, which plans to convert to a bank next year. According to the report, the Woolwich continued to have a high cost base. .

Threat to taxless pay

Karen Zagor on how the Budget may shrink some profit-related salary benefits

you are one of the three million or more people who receive a portion of income free of tax, thanks to a profit-related pay scheme, the Budget to be revealed in November carries the threat of reduced earnings.

Profit-related pay has long been considered a vulnerable tax perk. In theory, it encourages employees to contribute to a company's profitability by receiving a portion of salary tax-free, related to the compa-ny's profits. Under the current rules, employees can receive up to £4,000, or 20 per cent of salary, free of income tax. This can bring in an extra £1,600 a year for a 40 per cent taxpayer, equivalent to a £2,667 gross

Although profit-related pay schemes have been around since the mid-Eighties, they have only become popular recently. Philip Fisher of accountants Chantrey Vellacott says: "They took off suddenly year: partly because, in 1991, the benefits improved and partly because when the recession came along and employers were strapped for cash, they could give pay rises through profit-related pay.Companies could also give a smaller pay rise and take some for themselves."

But the schemes have been criticised for providing a tax haven for companies rather than a benefit for employees. This is because some companies are using the schemes to cut their own costs. There is related pay tax relief as part of the annual household budget, the good news is that the eme may change, but is unlikely to be axed entirely.

Until recently, it was widely expected that the Government would abolish tax relief on profit-related pay altogether, but with more people than ever now participating in a such pay schemes, total abolition is no longer considered politically expedient. Instead, it is now widely expected that the Chancellor will abolish tax relief on profitrelated pay at least for the top carners, bringing down their relief to the basic rate band. According to some estimates, this would bring in an extra El billion a year to the Treasury, but Mr Fisher predicts it would bring in no more than

Mr Fisher believes that the cost of profit-related pay to the Treasury is relatively low in comparison with the damage of restricting it. He says: "It must be tempting for the Treasury to consider abolishing profit-related pay, either to reduce the budget deficit or in order to help to finance a general cut in direct taxation. However, profit-related pay is now so widespread that the political cost of abolishing it should ensure its retention."

How many times have you heard this claim? Well, here are a few more, together with some intriguing facts.

Claim No.1: "An actively managed fund will perform better than an index-tracking fund."

Claim No.3: "You get what you pay for - active fund managers cost more but they're experts."

First Nick All too true. Active fund managers don't come cheap – they can take up to 20% of your investment over 10 years. But are they really experts? Ask any fund manager to put together a sensible portfolio of shares and the chances are he'll come up with...something that looks remarkably like the All-Share Index.

So why pay more for something that already exists?

Index-tracking PEPs don't need fund managers, so you don't have to pay extra for them.

ational Savings this week launched a new savings product exclusively for charities and other non-profit-making organisations. But the terms indicate that it is aimed at charities with money rather than the local Scout group. The Treasurer's Account is open to charities, public bodies. educational establishments, religious bodies, trade unions, friendly societies, clubs and societies. The minimum investment at £10,000 is unusually high for both NS and a charity/ club account. Such accounts can normally be opened with El, occasionally £5,000. Similarly, the Treasurer's Account has a high maximum balance at £2 million.

The account is not for day-today transactions - withdrawals require 30 days' notice, and instant access is at a cost of 30 days' interest. NS argues that charities and clubs can plan for expenditure and therefore do not require instant access. The interest rates are variable: 5 per cent gross for balances of £10,000-£25,000, 5.25 per cent for £25,000-£100,000 and 5.5 per cent for more than £100,000. Interest is paid gross, but is taxable so should be declared.

"These rates are competitive but not the best," says Christine Bayliss, of MoneyFacts. "The security of National Savings will be the most attractive feature for charities." The Coventry Building Society's Charities account pays 5.15 per cent gross on all balances from £1 to £50,000. The Skipton's High Street Notice pays 6 per cent gross on balances of more than £50,000 and 6.3 per cent on those of more than £100,000. Other institutions that offer funds specifically for registered charities also offer better rates on most tiers. The Central Board of Finance of the Church of England and CafCash Ltd (for the Charities Aid Foundation) both pay 5.45 gross on balance from II, while the COIF

There was a small piece of comfort this weekend for the 90,000 investors in the three Morgan Grenfell European unit trusts, now the centre of a City scandal, calling into question the current system of investor protection. Deutsche Bank, Grenfell's parent, pledged that would buy back units and shares in the trust if the E300

Thursday. How could this be when Deutsche Bank had pumped £180 million into the funds earlier in the week?

Whilst the money Deutsche provided was reassuring for investors, it effectively only protected the funds from their massive exposure to small unknown unquoted companies - more than three times Imro's 10 per cent limit in the case of MG's European Growth Fund.

But it did nothing for their legitimate quoted holdings, which were immediately marked down by market makers, who knew the company would be a forced seller if investors continued to flood out of the funds.

The fall in the funds' price was around eight times greater than European funds by other companies. But surely investors are to be compensated? Imro has appointed forensic accountants at Deloitte &

They will re-evaluate every unquoted stock held in the funds since April and recalculate each day's unit prices. If, as seems likely. Peter Young overvalued the unquoted stocks, units in his funds would have been priced too high. New investors would have paid a high offer price and would have received fewer units than they were due. (Imro is now considering whether they should be compensated with more units or cash). However, an uninflated bid price would have benefited investors leaving the funds.

Thankfully there is no suggestion that they will have to pay the money back.

Unit trusts currently use a dual pricing structure based on offer and bid prices. These are the prices at which investors buy and sell units in the fund. The difference between the two is called the "spread". Naturally the offer price is higher than the bid price, otherwise fund managers would not make any money. However, the Securities and Investments Board (SIB), the sees Imro, has laid down strict rules as to how the spread is calculated. To calculate the offer price fund managers first work out the value of the securities held in their funds. This includes any income such as interest and dividends accrued from these holdings. To this they add the dealing costs, such as stamp duty and brokerage. They then divide tal Gr this by the number of units in pricing.

issue. Finally they add their own initial charge and round the lot to four significant figures. The bid price is calculated as much the same way, only this time the expenses are. deducted from the value of the fund's assets.

How big is the spread?

It varies. Fund investing in. volatile and illiquid markets such as South-East Asia or even UK smaller companies. can have spreads of up to 11.5 per cent. In contrast, trusts. tracking the performance of their FT-SE 100 index will have a spread of only 0.75 per cent because the costs and charges are so low. The average maximum spread is around 9.5 per cent. The industry has been crying out for a simpler pricing structure for years. It is hoping that thearrival next year of the ugly sounding Ocics (open-ended investment companies, a new form of trust conforming to European laws) will herald the arrival of single pricing. Under single pricing a fund would have one price whether it was being bought or sold.

Can't unit trusts be singlepriced?

They can. In fact, the SIB is under pressure to introduce. single pricing soon after, if not simultaneously with, the launch of Oeics in the new year. But don't hold your breath. Oeics have been de layed more often than commuters this summer. Ironically, one of the suspended Morgan Grenfell trusts, the Dublin-based European Capital Growth, uses

KATE MUIR ON THE CONTINENTAL HABIT

In America tobacco is a drug, in France smoking is an art. Who will win the real cigarette war?

unchtime in the Café de la Mairie across from Saint-Sulpice in Paris: a beautiful woman enters and heads for a back banquette. She lights up a Gitanes and stretches her back like a luxuriating cat. She orders a salad as her second cigarette burns in the ashtray. Then she smokes her third between bites of lettuce. This is a step up from smoking between courses. For dessert, she combines Gitanes and an espresso. Her tastebuds are dead, but she has the

The Franco-Britannique Hospital, obstetrics department: the pregnant women waiting endlessly for their monthly check-ups look tense, not about birth but because some are dying for a cigarette. Outside, by the hospital's rose garden, a woman with what seems like a Space Hopper up her shirt sneaks a quick drag. Inside, others give her jealous looks. One tucks her Marlboro Lights deeper into her bag next to her copy of J'attends un enfant. A family bistro near Montparnasse: a request for the non-smoking section meets with a pitying look. This "section", compulsory by law, is one table directly opposite the lavatory. Worse still, the lavatory is a stand-up one where the aim must be true. Every minutes, the smoke-free diners are reminded of this fact as the door swings open.

A grand exhibition at the Pompidou Centre: 20 of the greatest names in design have put their minds to a project of national import recreating the Gitanes Blondes packet. The task is treated with the same seriousness as, say, a redesign of the French flag. The Blondes packet is a national icon, a symbol of French sophistication. The winner says his redesign symbolises "rebirth" and is for "the young smoker — open. cool, artistic, sympathetic". The papers print this, unquestioning.

s these vignettes show. France is one of the remaining countries where you can smoke and not feel a pariah. In America, President Clinton has classified cigarettes as a drug, but in France smoking remains an art. Both President Chirac and Prime Minister Alain Juppé have been caught smoking in public. The French would be unlikely to elect a president who did not inhale.

On paper, France has stricter rules on smoking than America or Britain. The French have banned all tobacco advertising on television and in magazines since 1991, making Clinton's recent curb on advertisements near schools and in youth magazines seem tame. Smoking has also been illegal for the past five years in all cafés, public workplaces, restaurants and stations, except in designated smoking sections. But as the newspaper Libération noted: "The smoking ban is just a big joke."

Café owners have had a tendency to declare their entire room a smoking section. Others have put sarcastic signs in the window: "Nonsmokers welcome." Even in the cafeteria of the Palais de Justice, police and judges puff away in a thick fug under the no-smoking signs, each who misbehaved. In Paris, the only restaurants that have found it worthwhile to pander to the law on smoking are those that cater for tourists. The native smokers are relegated up-in most restaurants, however, diners are treated better in smoking sections, while non-smokers are punished with the worst tables.

The ban reached a level of farce in the Metro this summer when transport officials gave out free chocolates to passengers in an attempt to discourage smoking on the platforms - an act which is illegal anyway.

Meanwhile, 34 per cent of the French remain confirmed smokers, compared with 28 per cent of Britons and 25 per cent of Americans.

s this resistance because individualistic French dislike interference from authority? Is it because they somehow believe they are immortal, that cancer and heart attacks will pass them by? Or is it because smoking is so socially condoned, so much part of the culture, that le pause caféclope, the coffee and fag break, will never die?

Of course, smokers themselves are dying constantly -60,000 a year of tobaccorelated diseases. Lung cancer is the largest cause of death for Frenchmen and it will soon be the same for women. But somehow the shadow of cancer does not hover so menacingly as it does in Britain. Many doctors are somewhat lackadaisical about disciplining their patients, according to François Turpin of the anticancer centre at St Cloud. "Doctors here could be a lot more forceful and give better information. Quite a lot of doctors here smoke anyway --even the cancer specialists,"

Dr Turpin says. Indeed, one pregnant friend cussed the risks with her doctor, who said: "I would rather have a calm, relaxed mother-to-be than someone tense and upset trying to give

The taboo on pregnant women smoking is less noticeable in France. During an interview with The Times earlier this year, the sevenmonths-pregnant actress Emmanuelle Beart smoked throughout. Compare this with the fuss over the interview in the American magazine Vanity Fair with the singer Courtney Love during her pregnancy, when the cigarette she was smoking had to be air-brushed out so as not to offend the American public. As Dr Turpin notes: "French people are just not au courant with the risks, so they worry less. They are under-educated about the dangers." The French spend a measly three centimes (less than lp) per person per year on antismoking campaigns, the British about 10p, and the Americans $1 (70p).

Government warnings on French cigarette packs are half the size of those in Britain, and nothing like as direct as the American "Smoking kills". Instead, there is the winipy "Smoking is bad for your health" or "Smoking can cause cardiovascular disease".

Pascal Melihan-Cheinin. the spokesman for the national anti-smoking campaign. says: "The French don't understand why smoking is forbidden in public places. There has never been any research done here on the effects of passive smoking, so no information programme exists on its dangers. The rights of non-smokers do not seem to matter."

He also has an unexpected explanation for the lack of change in France — the long held link between smoke-filled

Interference with the right to smoke is considered an attack on civil liberties. American "nanny state". No wonder Smoke, the Paul Auster novel turned film, is still playing a year after it opened in Paris, because it embodies the French appreciation of the tobacconist's shop as a pivotal part of the community.

In much of France, the tabac remains a pure concept, unlike British tobacconists, which are mostly newsagents or national chains sullied by Mars Bars and comics.

The narrow tabac just off the Marché St-Honore in Paris has a queue to the door every morning. "I see the same people every day on their way to work. I know their brand," the patron says, indicating the 100-plus varieties with his nicotine-yellowed fingers. He still smokes Gauloise, considered by many city dwellers to be a peasant's cigarette. THE EUROPEAN HABIT

SPAIN is a smoker's bastion. Nearly 40 per cent of the population smokes. and it is the country with the highest per capita consumption of cigarettes in the European Union.

Although men still have the edge in the cigarette stakes, señoras may soon outnumber them.

Tobacco advertising is permitted on billboards and in magazines but banned on television although the husky, fagfrayed voices of Spain's lady newsreaders are the most perfect publicity cigarette companies could wish for.

Even though the Government has an ambitious anti-smoking campaign. aimed particularly at schoolchildren, it also guards jealously its monopoly over the production and distribution of tobacco in the country. The contradiction has not so far been noted officially.

● THE GREEK state airline, Olympic Airways, banned smoking on its domestic flights in 1990. Last year the health ministry aired several television commercials in which smokers were portrayed as definitely un-cool. Yet about 46 per cent of all Greeks smoke, and the number is rising, despite a flurry of public awareness activity by the Ministry of Health aimed at young people and pregnant women. About 65 per cent of Greek doctors smoke. even in hospital corridors. where large no-smoking signs are blithely ignored by staff, patients and visi-

Studies show that 38 per cent of boys and 39 per cent of girls aged 17-18 smoke. Officials blame a strong tobacco lobby for discouraging severer anti-smoking measures. Export earnings from tobacco last year total-led almost £100 million. ● IN ITALY, smoking is so much a way of life that when the television cameras zoomed in on the winner of the Palio, the Siena horse race around the streets, last month, the to light up. Politicians, doctors, film stars and sportsmen think nothing of smoking on television. All the more surprising then to discover that the number of smokers in Italy is falling. In 1986, 30 per cent of adults smoked; now it is just over 25 per cent. This is partly due to the 1990 ban on advertising cigarettes, which can be bought only from authorised outlets.

Statistics appear to show a decline in smoking among the 14 to 18-yearolds, but the anecdotal evidence is that they smoke more and that more girls smoke than boys. According to Rosy Bindi CHOCOLLITE the Minister of Health. Italy is "suspicious of moralising puritanical crusades" such as the one launched by President Clinton. "We need health education, not slogans."

◆ THE GERMANS, reputedly obsessed with health and a mania for regulation, have a surprisingly liberal attitude to smoking. Trains have extensive smoking carriages and restaurants do not consign smokers to the worst tables.

More than 40 per cent of men and about 30 per cent of women smoke, but the number of those who have kicked the habit has been steadily growing over the last ten years.

Coalition politics are still thrashed out in smokefilled rooms, but the political parties ban smoking and hide the ashtrays when they invite the television cameras to film their democracy at work. Chancellor Helmut Kohl still smokes a pipe, but no longer in public.

Tobacco advertising is banned from radio and television and glamorisation of smokers is officially outlawed, but that has prevented prominent ads for the popular "West" brand. A couple, visibly topless, laze in a mountain lake puffing in intimate contentment, "Test it" says the caption suggestively.

n America, home of the anti-L tobacco movement, the campaign against smoking has been conducted over 30 years. It has been a classic deployment of emotional advocacy and long-term political controlwresting. At times it has run counter to American traditions of personal freedom, but for smokers there is now no escaping the fact that, officially, they are exiles.

Anti-smoking advocates, typically, come from the educated middle classes, people well versed in the victim-speak of liberal America and expert at organising themselves into committees. The tobacco industry has spent millions of dollars trying to vanquish the threat, but for every lobbyist and every lunch there has been more than adequate numbers of opponents of the weed. John Banzhaf, who founded the action group Ash (Action on Smoking and Health) in the 1960s, identifies certain important dates in the transformation of smoking in America from popular habit to pariah addiction:

• 1964: the US Surgeon General's office reported that smoking could cause lung cancer, the first Government agency to do so.

HOW AMERICA UPPED THE ANTI

• 1965: a federal law demanded health warnings to be placed on cigaretic packets. These said tobacco could be "hazardous".

• 1967: the Federal Communications Commission, in a fairness doctrine", provided for anti-smoking messages to be broadcast on television. In one early example, a boy was shown imitating his father in various household tasks, finishing with the youngster copying his dad by lighting a cigarene. A slogan read: "Like father, like son". The television slots led to the first drop in cigarette consumption. 1971: cigarette commercials were banned from radio and television. This measure was supported by the tobacco industry.

which hoped that it would satisfy the antis and that they would drop their campaign. The wish was not fulfilled. • 1973: smoking was banned in ■ 1975: Arizona became the first state to recognise non-smokers'

some sections of American rights. This led to the restriction on smoking in some public places such as lifts and corridors.

 1976: first injunction against smoking in an office. The case, in New Jersey, concerned a telephone company employee who claimed she was sensitive to smoke and deserved a non-fuggy work atmosphere. The court agreed.

• 1981: New Hampshire banned smoking in most public places. ● 1982: the No Net Cost Tobacco Programme Act eliminated many subsidies to American tobacco

 1986: two federal agencies concluded that passive smoking could cause lung cancer. • 1988: smoking ban on internal flights of two hours or less.

• 1990: smoking ban on all domestic flights. • 1993: the Environmental Protection Agency reported that passive smoking can cause group A carcinogens. • 1994: McDonald's banned smoking in all its hamburger outlets — a "genuinely important moment" in the words of John Banzhaf.

 1996: Bill Clinton, the first American president habitually to suck unlit cigars (his wife will not let him smoke in the White House) classed tobacco an addictive drug. This placed cigarettes in the domain of the Food and Drugs Administration. which quickly issued guidelines. Tobacco advertisements in youthorientated magazines are now limited and cigarette hoardings at sports venues are restricted.

For all the legislative muscle the non-smokers now have, cigarette manufacturers have not yet lost the war. Smoking among children is on the rise, and in chic urban circles. such as twenty-something Manhattan, the cigarette remains hip. Groups such as Ash do not admit it. but there is a suspicion that the smoking argument has now reached the stage that the more they drone on about the dangers of eigarettes. the more the young will be inclined to want to light up, partly to see what all the fuss is about partly to irritate the older generation.

QUENTIN LETTS

Forget exams and league tables. At last, the answer to a problem that has worried parents for years: what to put in the tuck box?

ever having had a boarding school education. I know little of what goes into tuck boxes. The nearest we got to tuck at our school was those third-pint bottles of milk which Mrs Thatcher stopped. They were doled out by the prefects in such an engaging way that they thumped you if you had the cheek to ask for a bottle, and thumped you even harder if you didn't, because they felt like it. Happy days. She may not have known it, but stopping that milk may have been Mrs T's greatest contribution to law and order.

But I can imagine what goes into a tuck box. There must be nothing of a nutritional nature, vitamins specifically excluded, and if any item cannot be held in one hand, the wrapper removed with the other and then eaten while still turning the pages of a Latin primer, it is no tuck box food at all. All this is very much on my mind, having just dispatched a child back to his boarding school for the new term. I neither shopped for, nor packed the tuck box. and so it would be unwise of me to criticise. However, it would be fair to say of that nice Cadbury family than to ours. But we are not alone; one returning boy was heard to boast that his tuck box contained nothing but a kilo of Frosties.

Do not think we feel no shame. One proud boy lugged his mum's massive fruit cake more than 200 miles only to find that the journey had reduced it to its original ingredients. Never mind, she may be a lousy cook, but she's a real parent, and he'll think lovingly of her every time he takes a teaspoon to that mountain of crumbs. But for most parents, carrying a burden of guilt for having sent their children away in the first place, and feeling that they should be provided for as if they were in for a spell as a Beirut hostage, where do they turn for advice? No one has given this specialised but essential branch of family cookery much thought. But I have, and I am now of the opinion that nothing beats a cake. No ordinary cake, enough to be fortifying, heavy enough to keep them at their desks during homework, moist enough to last without the lid on the tin (because they will forget); it must also be cuttable with a protractor, and hold together in such a way that the crumbs can be rolled into tight balls and flicked across a classroom with a ruler. Here goes. In the early 1960s, the middle-aged Stella Atterbury, who confesses to being no cook at the time. decided to open a country hotel. Her book, Never Too Late (now out of print). told of her rapid education in the kitchen. One major problem was never knowing and hence how many cakes she should bake, and which they might prefer - like having to feed a horde of schoolchildren, really. So she came up with a "cake foundation" recipe and, when she wanted a cake, all she had to do was quickly add the fruit, spice, choco-late, cherries, whatever. All the hard work had aiready been done. Ingenious, for there is no doubt that if the

with any certainty how many people would be requiring afternoon tea. she warns, "the eggs must be added gently otherwise the resulting cakes will rise quickly while cooking, and then flop". This may be anathema in the country house hotel but not in tuck boxes, so I attacked the mixing with none too light a hand. The resulting canary yellow cream will keep in a fridge for as long as the eggs would have done. Miss Atterbury says at least a fortnight.

> Then to the flavouring, and the choice is bewildering. Starting with your foundation, you have the basic building block for everything from a cherry gateau to a sand cake. My eye fell upon the apple sauce cake. With apples, it will at least have some vitamins in it. But don't tell him.

I peeled, cored and sliced three of my prize Norfolk Beefings (rare cooking apples I grow in the garden) and boiled they were a mush. I took 10oz of my foundation, simply added an ounce of butter, two of dark brown sugar, 80z of mixed dried fruit and candied peel, 80z of plain flour and a teaspoon of bicarbonate of soda. Together with an egg, I mixed them until they held together, and found it was the easiest cake I had ever made. Then I added about half a pint of the apple mush, a hefty teaspoon of ground cinnamon instead of the recommended 20z of chopped preserved ginger (because he doesn't like it), and mixed. That's it.

With a gallon or two of foundation lurking in the larder, you could have a freshly-baked cake every day of the week for the time it takes to do a bit of simple mixing. I baked it for about an hour and quarter in a medium oven.

It smelt fantastic, seasonal and inspiring. Resisting all temptations to devour

it. I have put it in the post.
I have not yet heard how things are going this term, but if he writes asking for another one, but with a file added to the mixture, we shall know that school is

CHOCOLATE BOX

NO LESS a judge than Michel Roux described her as the Queen of Chocolate: her truffles moved Egon Ronay to pronounce that they had no equal. SARA JAYNÉ is one of Britain's finest chocolate makers and the marketing director of the Académie Culinaire in London:

HAVING been passionate about food and cooking all my life, insistent on making everything for my dinner parties and tired of manufacturers' mass-produced imposters, I experimented in the early 1980s with a recipe for truffles that I found in a book called The Great Chefs of France. It was, as far as I can remember, a simple combination of cocoa powder, icing sugar and butter. As it is with these coincidences which change lives, two of my dinner guests on that occasion had just opened a fine food shop and asked me to make some more to sell. The truffles took off, taking me completely by surprise. That was 14 years and more than 300,000 truffles ago, although the recipe and ingredients have changed dramatically since then.

It is vital that you use the very best ingredients, the finer the better. As the variety of the grape, the soil in which it is grown, the climate and the husbandry is so important for grand cru wines, so the cocoa bean and its geography is important for chocolate. But you can find decent chocolate in nearly every high street supermarket (look for Menier and M&S own brand).

SIXTY per cent cocoa solids is what you need for a cracking taste. (That is cocoa and cocoa butter and the more cocoa butter, the smoother and more sensuous it is.) You don't have to break the bank but it's worth getting a good product - the taste is better and it is easier to handle. Cheap chocolate "seizes"

(thickens to an unmanagable mass) very easily while cocoa butter keeps it viscous. Apart from the quality of the ingredients, you must be prepared to practise and have bags of patience and perseverance. I recall a patissier from the Ritz in Paris telling me that after only two weeks away from his rolling pin, he feels stale and uninspired when he returns. What hope is there for us

 Next week: Sara Jayne reveals her truffle recipe.

Buffalo on the bill

WITH THE continuing nervousness about BSE, not being a cow is becoming something of a selling point on the supermarket shelf. After ostrich and kangaroo, the latest beast to hog the limelight is the buffalo.

Safeway and Waitrose have already started trials of a buffalo cheese made from a buffalo herd in Worcester. The cheesemaker, Malvern Cheesewrights, perhaps wisely, decided not to go for a buffalo mozzarella (the Italians having already been there and done that) but to produce an unpasteurised hard cheese which has roughly the consistency of cheddar, the colour of a sheep's milk cheese (a sort of dirty cream) and a pungent, rather goaty flavour.

Although the cheese is proving a local hit in Worcester, it seems unlikely to sweep the nation. For a start, it costs £6.49 a lb (buffalo yield about a third of the milk of a cow) and, secondly, it is unfashionably high in fat as the Safeway newsletter rather surprisingly chooses to reveal in these gastronomically correct times, buffalo milk has a 78 per cent fat content, double that from a Friesian cow.

Sainsbury's is also putting a toe in the water with buffalo steaks, which have just gone into II of its stores. According to a spokesman, they come from a ranch in Alberta "roughly the same size as Wales" and are very lean. As well they might be at £32 a kg.

Going Latin

THOSE relentless sensationseekers among you who are already bored with balti, tired of Thai, and stuffed with sushi will be delighted to learn that a new restaurant craze is on the way: Latin American.

My Kinda Town -- the owner of the Chicago Pizza Pie Factory and Henry J. Bean chains - has followed up the success of its Salsa and Cuba restaurants in London by opening a third Latin restaurant, the Havana in Fulham Broadway, west London, while next week sees a whole week devoted to Argentina in such beacons of London fashionability as the Groucho Club, the Avenue and Kensington Place.

Before you get too excited, I feel it is only fair to warn you that the success of Latin American restaurants probably owes rather more to potency of the caiprinhas (a heady rum and lime cocktail) and the seductiveness of the music than to the quality of the cuisine. "Throughout Argentina Week, you will have the chance of experiencing Dolores Sola and Maria Volonte performing vibrant seductive tango, heavily breathes the leaflet issued by John Armit Wines (0171-727 6846), which is co-ordinating the week's

If you can't make a date with Dolores and Maria you can always console yourself with a jar of Dulce di Leche, the irresistibly fudgy caramel spread that forms the backbone of the Argentinian desserts which are (according to the aforementioned steamy leaflet) "born of the fantasies of Argentinian women who are some of the most beautiful in the world".

Presumably they just fantasise about it rather than eat it.

Fiona Beckett

A 450g jar contains a mindboggling 5,800 calories. If you don't care, you can find it in Sainsbury's Special Selection at £2.95 for a 450g jar.

Get baking

IT IS NOT often that I get inspired by books on baking, which these days mainly seem to focus on how to make a cake in the shape of Pamela Anderson. But a new book by former Masterchef winner Sue Law-rence, On Baking (Kyle Cathie, £18.99), is enticing enough to make you want to take it up full time.

Sue includes a wide range of recipes from the homely (singin' hinnies) to the exotic (spinach empanadas) to the downright decadent (polenta chocolate cake). Among the other recipes I'm dying to try are lime and brown sugar meringue biscuits, yoghurt and bramble scones and banana pizza.

Incidentally, if you are hankering after a Pamela Anderson cake, from next month you will be able to buy Sainsbury's new Beach Babe cake com-plete with "edible 3D red fondant bathing suit" for just £7.50. Can't wait.

IT IS APPALLING to have to think of Christmas already, but if you want to eat out it's as

Buffalo in the wings: after ostrich and kangaroo meat comes cheese made from buffalo milk as well as steaks for the well-heeled and adventurous well to make a reservation now. Not that it's cheap. You could probably take the entire family to the Costa Brava for the price of Christmas lunch in some of London's top hotels. According to a release from the Savoy group, the Berkeley will cost £115 a head, Claridges £125 and the Savoy River Room £145 (a mere £75 for children under 12).

New Year's Eve is even worse, rising to £195 (Berkeley). £225 (Claridges — includ-ing. as well they might, half a bottle of champagne) and £295 (Savoy, inclusive of drink and the Grenadier guards). Even allowing for the overtime paid to staff to work over Christmas, it seems a bit steep.

Things are a little better out of London. For £340 (little more than the cost of dinner at the Savoy) you can spend three nights at the very comfortable Castle hotel in Taunton, where the chef is the excellent Phil Vickery, inclusive of all meals, as well as a five-course Christmas lunch. The New Year's Eve dinner is a bargain too, at

If you are planning an evergreen hedge, you don't have to wait until the spring, Stephen Anderton says

I grow the large-flow-ered tuberous begonias in a wooden conservatory and they are usually covered in flowers, strong and almost like shrubs Last year one got mildew and this year they are all covered with it. I treated the dry tubers with flowers of sulphur in winter and have sprayed the mildew this year but to no avail. — J. Mason, Shepshed, Lei-

Spraying against mildew once it has got a hold in something as soft as a begonia is usually ineffectual. Next year try spraying earlier, before the infection strikes, to clean up your stock. Do not grow them too hot and dry. Because they are so top heavy in pots it is easier to grow them under glass, but you must give plenty of ventilation to avoid the greatest heat. If it is any consolation, my Begonia sutherlandii. which grew cleanly for ten years in the north, this year succumbed to mildew in the south, even outdoors. I had assumed it to be immune.

How should you dead-head floribusda roses? If you cut back to the nearest bud you seem to take off rather a lot of stalk and leaf, but if you don't the result looks like a hat-peg muddle. - Mrs M. Bevan, Cambridge.

I wonder if you are cutting back to the first dormant bud or the first bud which has started to shoot? You should remove the whole cluster of spent flowers down to the first (or first strong) leaf and bud. There may be a leaf

The heathers and heaths in my garden are becoming overgrown. I want to cut the areas back so they occupy their allocated spaces. When is it best to do this? — R. Forster. Stockport, Cheshire.

With the exception of A with the tree heath Erica arhorea, most heaths and heathers do not respond to being cut back hard. You can reduce the area they cover by cutting back sideways in March but do not expect old wood to sprout new shoots or old plants to look young again. It is better to have the lot out and start again with fresh young plants. The life span of heathers varies. Some look good for five to six years. others for 30 if you keep them well pinched back in their youth and middle age. Replant in September/ Oct-ober or March/April. E. arborea can grow to 10ft tall or more, with proper trunks. These can be cut down low in spring and will sprout well. The tree can ergreens not only keep their leaves through the winter but they use them throughout. continuously turning light into energy, if rather more slowly than in summer. To do that they must have roots that work properly. And to that end evergreens need to be transplanted just before the end of the season, when there is less heat and sunlight to exercise the leaves but the ground is still warm enough to encourage the roots of a newly planted shrub to push out into the surrounding soil and to establish a source of nourishment. When winter winds tear at the leaves, the sap has to be drawn from somewhere.

Some people like to plant evergreens in spring, just before the growing season starts in March, so that again the roots have a chance to estab-lish themselves before being exercised by growth above. I prefer to plant in autumn. because the plants then get off to the optimum start in spring. I know a really bad winter can wallop some newly-planted hedges, burning foliage or even killing outright, and there is logic in leaving that risk in the nurseryman's hand rather than your own.

If a hedge is to go into an exposed position, then good staking of taller plants and the wind, by hessian or webbed plastic windbreak, is Really gruesome, wind-swept seaside sites are better left until spring. But in normal garden conditions, autumn planting of most evergreens is advantageous.

Last month I spent £80 on 16 pot-grown yew trees to make a hedge. They were a couple of feet high. I could have spent half as much again for taller plants, but £80 seemed like enough for a hedge. At least with yews you can plant them well apart, at 30-36in intervals, as opposed to 12in for thorn, or 18in for beech. Yew is more commonly offered pot-grown these days just because it is easier to handle for the retailers and can be sold at any time. But now is still the best time to plant it. It will come cheaper if you can find plants which have been lifted with a rootball with its soil intact and bundled in hessian. The risks are higher. But at a fiver a plant I wonder just how well thay have been treated on the long journey from Holland, the home of so many non-specialist plants. When I see bundles of Dutch-grown cherry laurel coming bare-rooted off the back of a lorry on a windy March day, in a commercial nursery. I see the sense in buying plants which can be seen to be thriving in a pot, even if they cost more. Laurel

Plant evergreens in the autumn while the ground is still warm enough to encourage the roots to establish themselves will survive that degree of rough and tumble, but not yew. And yew, be aware, can take a deceptively long time to die. Did the yew which browned off in April or May receive the fatal shock in January, or March, or last week? How will you prove it?

You will not find much in the way of substantial potgrown evergreen hedging plants for under £2.50, so a hedge is an investment and it pays to cosset it.

ife for hedging plants is hell. There they are. standing shoulder to shoulder for the whole of their working lives, fighting each other for food and water. If they put a leaf out of place someone chops it off.

The same goes for roots sometimes. Someone might throw them a handful of Growmore once a year, or maybe a mulch of compost. But that is all. So getting them off to a generous start is terribly important.

Dig a proper trench for a new hedge. Two feet deep and as much wide is not at all overgenerous. Get some manure or old compost into the bottom, and work some slowrelease fertiliser into the soil before you plant. Pretend they are prize leeks and you are out to plant the row of rows.

Light is as important as food for a strong hedge, and hedges in dingy, overhung corners will always be slower. Healthy yew in full light will put on a foot a year happily. Cypresses will double or treble that. Even single leader and not stopped, although the faster, sappier cypresses such as leylandii can be stopped young and will soon develop a second leader. Holly should only be stopped if it looks unlikely to develop a well-furnished base. Some people like to plant staggered hedges, in two rows of alternate plants. But unless you want a particularly fat hedge (which is harder to maintain) most evergreens are stocky enough to succeed as a single line. Spindlier decideous species, such as beech or thorn, can be usefully planted in staggered rows. Privet and golden privet, which are virually evergreen in a normal winter, can also be planted in staggered rows, if required. It is a kindness to any new hedge to keep grass and lawns well back for three or lour years, until they are established. I like to maintain a foot of bare, or better still mulched. soil between the two, to reduce competition and to ensure that all possible light is let in to the lower branches in those formative years. The denser a hedge at the bottom in its first two or three years, the better it will be ten years down the line. And in 20 years. And in 50. So give it a good start.

Picton Garden during the next few weeks will change your mind. It is on the spectacular, west-facing side of the Malvern hills, and has a distinguished background.

At the beginning of this century Ernest Ballard, the renowned nurseryman, raised many new Michaelmas daisies here, and the tradition has been followed hy two generations of Pictons, Percy and now his son Paul, who have maintained the garden's horticultural heritage.

time of year, the borders of Michaelmas daisies, arranged so as to present a visual encyclopaedia, are a speciacular sight. In recent years the garden's diversity has steadily grown; the rose garden will be past its best now but the richly planted mixed herbaceous borders give an indication of the unusual perennials that can be found within the nursery, as well as the alpines that spread their way across the tufa rock garden.

■ The Dingle, Welshpool. Powys (01938 555145).

Three miles north of Welshpool via A490 to Llanfyllian. Open daily, except Tues. 9am-Spm. Garden entry £1 for charity. children free.

The Dingle garden tumbles down a steep hillside from the house to a large pool at the bottom and many visitors' first reaction is wonder at how the garden was made at all as they follow the dizzy paths that zig-zag down the slope between wellgrouped banks of trees and shrubs.

Lots of conifers, including many dwarf varieties, give substance to the planting and show off the selection of more unusual and decorative trees and shrubs. such as eucalyptus and pieris.

On the far side of the pool, a section of woodland can be explored in a more leisurely atmosphere than the main area on the slope.

Looking from here across the water to the garden rising up on the far side the careful grouping and arrangement of plants, that has been built up over many years, is clearly evident. From now into October the show of autumn foliage becomes increasingly impressive and the nursery offers tempting and unusual

Mellow, yellow and bordering on dramatic

Suddenly the roses and delphiniums are over and the garden is bathed in the ochre of rudbeckias, helianthus, heliopsis, and heleniums, all rich and golden with their own individual anractions and habits. But what should we mix with them? It might be purple salvias, scarlet crocosmias, dahlias or reefs of rich blue-and-white agapanthus. Forde Abbey in Dorset has a huge, long border devoted to lateseason yellows and mauves, and it is breathtakingly bold and beautiful in the late afternoon sun. Waterperry Gardens in Oxfordshire has stock beds where you can see dozens of late daisies strutting their various stuffs. But I have this hankering to make a border simply of different yellows and browns.

My border would involve all those yellows, but he spiked first with Echinacea purpurea, a stout, cone-centred daisy 2ft-3ft tall. Its attraction in good forms is the contrast of orange-brown cone with glowing, pinkish-mauve, almost liverish petals. No one walks past this one unless they are immune to

I would also want to use the redbronze of helemiums as well as their yellows. H. 'Pumilum Magnificum' is only 30in high, but a glorious deep yellow in its central boss and radiating petals, which are deeply norched at the edge giving the whole flower a fringed appearance. Crimson Beauty is mahogany brown, earlier but similar to 'Moerheim Beauty', in which the central boss is brown and almost, as the flower ages, spherical. I am always reluctant to deadhead them, but it is worth it at first to improve the flowers which appear later on. The same is true of the giant yellow scabious cephalaria, earlier in the year. The deadheads of the first flowers may detract from the later ones, but the last dead-heads, once the petals have dropped, are an attraction in themselves for a few weeks.

The daisies with no place in my scheme will be Anthemis tinctoria and its varieties. Generous of flower they may be, but they are too early and leave a poor-looking hole Daisies are ideal flowers for providing a burst of colour in late summer by the time the late daisies are about 3ft high and carries panicles getting into gear. Annual sunflowers, on the other hand, are fine in late summer, and there are so many to choose from now. No longer are there just the heavyheaded goliaths grown by children. There are bronzes and near-reds, and they flower anywhere from knee to head high, some with single heads and short stalks for picking, some with several heads to extend the season. Look out for 'Velvet Queen' and 'Prado Red'.

I should like to try them in my border alongside the grower Thomson & Morgan's Amaranthus cruentus Golden Giant, an annual "prince's feather" which grows to many clumps of daisies, however, can pall, and some strong horizon-tals and verticals in the border would be beneficial. I would plant Veratrum nigrum as an edge-ofborder incident, where you could get close to see the tiny maroonblack flowers stacked up and down the length of the flower spike. There would be some towering primrose candelabra of Verbascum olympicum here and there at the back to wave in the wind. I would also use columns of the dark-leafed form of common fennel, too. A horizontal element might come from the tall but flat-headed Achillea 'Coronation Gold' and Solidaster 'Lemore'. If the border were to be predominantly yellow it would be a good idea to weave in seams of different tones of yellow, as well as different textures.

I always enjoy the bright lemon allow petals and green nose cones of Rudbeckia 'Herbstsonne', which can reach 6ft tall, and I would have the perennial sunflower Helianthus 'Limelight' for its gentler shade. The shorter black-eyed Rudbeckia 'Goldsturm' has a black cone and is the brassiest of yellows for the front of a border.

hat is it about these yellow daisies which makes them need reg-ular replanting? Left alone to their own devices, most of them soon become congested and their self-supporting qualities fade along with the size and number of the flowers. I should have all the daisies in this border, and the solidaster, on a two or three-cycle. dividing and replanting them in newly enriched soil in March to keep them really fresh.

Late-summer borders may be rich in end-of-year harvest colours, but that is all the more reason for keeping the plants fresh and healthy. Never mind the work; think of the results.

Rachel Kelly on how project experts guide house building

Iton John uses them. And so, increasingly, do others. Fed up with the hassle of restoring a house and coordinating builders, decorators, plumbers and electricians, they are hiring project managers to do it for them.

Such managers are no longer just for the rich. John used them to reconstruct a 1704 orangery, but the rest of us could use them for, say, a kitchen extension.

Last spring, APS Private Clients, a firm with a long experience of managing com-mercial projects, decided to provide the same service for homeowners. Laurie Atkinson, a director, says: "In a world of duel incomes, and where time is money, we realised that there was a big demand for a firm which would take charge of all aspects of moving into and restoring a house. Busy people, especially those with young families, don't have the time to do the work."

The firm claims to tackle every aspect of a move or renovation, dealing with planners, awkward neighbours and even English Heritage, the conservation quango, if need be. Typically, it will organise anything from foundations to air-conditioning, sanitary fittings to security, ironmongery to landscaping. It charges a commission of 7.5-10 per cent on the budget, but reckons to hand on savings by buying materials at cost.

Other management firms concentrate on providing services only for the rich. Simon Jones, the managing director of Gardiner and Theobald Management Services, says: "We have been looking after the private property of individuals worldwide for many years. These are often people complete discretion. Many architects double as project managers. The Geoffrey Purves Partnership in Newcastle-upon-Tyne has designed a number of houses, mostly in the North Mr

Purves says that building a house doesn't need the "separate specialism" of a project manager. "A competent archi-tect offers the same services on a small building."

he Purves partner-ship does not work within any one particular architectural style. Mr Purves says it is seeking to provide good architecture". It does not charge a fixed commission, but agrees a fee for each project with the

> Another firm of architects which offers project management as part of its services is the John S. Bonnington Partnership in St Albans, Hertfordshire. It designs few private houses, but will take on large houses for the wealthy. It has recently built a multimillion pound house in Bishop's Avenue, north

London. Mr Bonnington says that to hire a large partnership like his for a small house would be expensive. Its fees depend on the size of the project. For a big development, its commission can be as small as 5 per cent, but for a £100,000 house it would rise to at least 10 per cent. This fee includes most of the services project managers offer. The client need only liaise with the architects, who hire and deal with all the contractors, and can even arrange for foreign specialist craftsmen to come and work on the building. But there are some areas of development that project managers are involved in which architects do not deal with. For example, APS will find a client land to build on or an existing building to redevelop, and can arrange the purchase. It also takes responsibility for solving party-wall disputes, a common problem in cities. Mr Atkinson says APS offers a service that most architects used to but few do now. He calls it "a full, orchestrated. hands-on looking after of the client's interest".

A WEIGHT OFF YOUR MIND

RICHARD and Julie Taylor used the Geoffrey Purves Partnership as project manager to design their house, Haleyon Days, in Swarland, Northumberland (above), to their own specifications. Mr Taylor describes it as in a modern style with a cottage theme"

The main feature of the four-bedroom house is a dramatic roof which slopes all the way from the top of the building, over the the garage and to ground level. It was the Taylor's idea, which Mr Purves incorporated in the plans. Mr Taylor says it "makes the house unique".

The Taylors chose the Purves partnership because they wanted an architect who could also attend to all the details of its building. Mr Taylor's job as a sales manager involves travelling all over the world, so it was impossible for him to oversee building work.

Mr Purves approached various building firms about the house and took tenders for the job of building it. Then he and the Taylors decided which builder to employ. Mr Purves took responsibility for the entire project, except the bathroom and kitchen fittings, until the front-door keys were handed over.

Mr Taylor was delighted with the result. But not all the problems were taken from his shoulders. He and his wife still had to attend a few site meetings, though not as many as would be usual in the building a new house.

As far as Mr Taylor is concerned, "it would be unrealistic to say that when you have a house built to your own specifications, it's without pain and disappointment". But he says that he and his wife are "very satisfied with the houses and flats in prime locations hots up, more buyers are turning to professional property seekers. There are about 250 of these house-hunters or relocation agents in Britain, and business is booming.

Can't go house-hunting? Cheryl Taylor knows the agents who can

Buying agents, relocation or property search companies do not come cheap They charge about 1-2.5 per cent of the purchase price, plus an initial registration fee of up to £2,500. However, most claim they can end up saving the buyer money on the purchase price, even though this could result in their earning less, pro rata.

In return, they draw up a shortlist of suitable properties for buyers to view. some of which may never formally come on the market. The buying agents often hear of houses that owners want to sell but are reluctant to advertise on the open market, particularly if the sale is forced by debt or divorce. Their services can also include carrying out searches on the property, dealing with solicitors, arranging surveys and furniture removals.

Because the buying agents - who are often former estate agents - have a good knowledge of area sale prices, they can advise clients on how much to offer. They can also negotiate with the vendor's estate agent to get the lowest possible price. And, because the purchaser has to pay an upfront retainer to a buying agent, the estate agent knows he is dealing with a scrious buyer who is likely to proceed with brink of destruction than any other old country house in England. Three fires ravaged the building and two public inquiries were held to consider demolishing it. The result was that the house lost all sense of grace and charm.

Today Maristow is as pretty in pink as any villa in the Bay of Naples, and L2 houses have been created within the shell of the mansion and stables.

Maristow is the tenth and largest country house to be rescued from dereliction by the entrepreneur Kit Martin. This long list includes Elizabethan Dingley Hall in Northamptonshire, baronial Cullen House in Banffshire and, most recently, the vast Baroque pile, Burley-on-the-Hill in Rutland.

Peter Sutton. the Devon architect who has worked with Mr Martin on Maristow, says: "When I first saw the house I thought it was not restorable. It was unbelievably depressing and grey. Rain was dripping down in every part of the building, even though it had a corrugated fron roof. In the cellars were every kind of dry rot known to man: the specialists who treated it got so excited with what they found that they held a training weekend here."

Maristow appealed instantly to Mr Martin, because of its ravishing setting on the Tavey estuary north of Plym-outh. The house looks over the river to hanging woods as lush and deep as any described in Daphne du Maurier's Frenchman's Creek, which was set in the area. There is no other building in sight, only the distant silhouette of Saltash bridge, which Brunel built across the Tamar. The beauty of the Maristow estate, recognised as being in an Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty, owes much to its long tenure by the Lopes family. Massey Lopes, MP, bought the estate in 1798; in 1805 he was created a baronet. The fourth baronet was created Baron Roborough of Maristow in 1938, just as history decreed that the family should never live in the house again. With the onset of the Second World War, the house was requisitioned, continuing in various institutional uses until after 1945 when the last tenants departed, leaving it a smouldering wreck.

Sir Massey had bought the mid-18th century house built for the Heywood family, who had entertained George III and his family here. in 1789. In 1871, the Lopes commissioned Piers St Aubyn, whose family lived at St Michael's Mount, to build a large chapel with a soaring spire behind the house. This was faced in Plymouth limestone and was one part of the buildings to survive in good condition. Monthly services are still held there.

In 1907, the family called in Ernest George and his pupil and partner Alfred Yeates (the architects of Claridges) to enlarge and remodel the mansion, filling it with sumptuous

with 42 acres along the estuary last year, says: "Maristow has the best protected views I have been able to achieve anywhere. The new residents will own the parkland in front of the house and the walks through pleasure grounds on the hill behind. The Lopes Estate has agreed restrictive covenants on the woods on both sides of the river, so they will never be built on."

Mr Martin has restored the house and outbuildings, helped by a contri-bution towards the cost of recooling from the Roborough family.

Maristow was in such a desperate state that the economics of restoring it was a problem. Mr Martin's solution has been to scrap the burnt-out attic two storeys (with flatroofs) rather than three. From below, you hardly notice the change. Pediments, parapets and roof balustrades have all been restored so that the silhouette is unaltered.

The interior was in a terrible state. Mr Martin says. "We were faced with the theft of a large number of fireplaces, many of the 18th-century stair bannisters, all the bookshelves in the library and all the Edwardian oak panelling in the dining room.

There are now 12 houses on the estate: six in the main building and six in the grounds. Two of the houses in the main building, Pediment House and the South Wing, have been completed, and three are available to buy from plan. There are four houses in the grounds left for sale, of which Dairy House and the Chapel House have been completed. The West Stable House, which was on offer at £185,000, was the first to be sold. In the 1950s it had been crudely converted into a schoolroom but now has a large drawing room, lofty kitchen and a dining hall with the original stable stair. Upstairs are four bedrooms and three bathrooms.

The West Wing of the main house, which was on offer for £325,000, has a splendid drawing room with rich Edwardian plasterwork and four bedrooms and three bathrooms above. The South Wing, soon to be on offer at £375,000, contains the original main staircase and dining room.

The adjoining three-bedroom Pediment House will be on offer at £190,000, while the asking price for the Chapel House at the back is £160,000. All the houses have their own garden or yard and are sold freehold, with restrictive covenants and access to the shared parts of the ground, which the residents will own and control through a management company.

Mr Martin might be forgiven for thinking that destiny had a hand in all this. Not only is the church dedicated to St Martin but Maristow was once called Martinstow. He has resisted the temptation to change the name.

channel, weathervanes may have lost their function, but they have more than made up for it in form. A silent invasion of Britain's rooftops has taken place in recent years, from whimsical mini-vanes on garages and outhouses to public art installations costing many thousands. Now we do not need them, we are indulging in them more than ever as purely decorative items.

The sky's the limit when it comes to motifs (though sadly many go unappreciated as we hurry past. eyes clamped at ground level). The majority are designed so that the arrowhead points upwind while the larger surface area of the motif. which catches the air current, points downwind.

it is no accident that the cockerel has dominated weathervane motifs for centuries. (Britain's earliest surviving example, on the church at Ottery St Mary in Devon, dates from [340.) That big tail and small, distinctive head are ideally proportioned for this wind-catching action. And the shape works equally well as a moulded, three-dimensional. Iull-bodied vane or a silhouette, flat plane vane in sheet metal - the less expensive and more common of the two basic types.
The Rural Development Commission (RDC) catalogue of designs, which is geared towards helping blacksmiths cater to public demand, features no less than five weathercocks. This most Christian mage remains a popular domestic choice in the secular 1990s, partly perhaps because of its versatility.

Paul Allen, master blacksmith and forgework adviser of the RDC, says, however: "A lot of people are commissioning their own tailormade designs showing anything from the family crest, their work, their pastimes or family pets." Mr

Allen remains a traditionalist when it comes to methods: "Today many people are using electric welders and cutters but it's a far cry from real forging - shaping in the fire and on the anvil." A decent quality vane, made with proper workmanship, should cost between £100 and £200, he says. Simple though they may look, a certain amount of precision work is involved, such as proper balancing to ensure the motif rotates freely on

It is this kind of precision that is absent in imports, from places such Weathervanes are back in demand, silently invading Britain's rooftops. And when it comes to design, the sky's the limit product of cheap, unskilled labour. They tend to be copies of traditional American vanes — usually in animal forms such as fish, pigs, horses, whales and cockerels — from full-bodied copper pieces pressed out of cast-iron moulds. And then there is the question of size, because what looks like a modestly-proportioned cockerel up on the spire is often several feet high. The higher up it is going, the bigger it needs to be, and the greater the cost of installation. Phil Johnson of P. Johnson & Co. who made a £65,000 weathervane for a roundabout near Edinburgh for the Livingston Development Corporation, is membership secretary of the British Artist Blacksmith Association (BABA), founded in 1978 by Richard Quinnell to breathe new life and innovation into what he saw as a dying art. as the Philippines, which are the The £40 annual membership, open to professionals and non-practicing enthusiasts alike, entitles you to the quarterly British Blacksmith magazine, newsletters, training courses smithing is a living craft where tradition meets innovation." His silhouette weathervanes are cut out by computer-generated lasers rather than by saw or hammer and chisel. He also uses materials such as stainless steel and bronze as well as iron and solid Teflon bearings which do not rust or require oil. Mr Ouinnell says: "In the 17th century Pepys wrote about wandering around London on a very windy day and hearing all the weathervanes squeaking and creaking. We use modern rustproofing techniques, like zinc coating for steel and high performance paints. Let's not forget these vanes may go for centuries without any maintenance." He still values traditional techniques, however. "You can train someone to cold-bend strips of iron in a matter of minutes but proper blacksmithing involves heating metal until it's red hot and hitting it into interesting shapes — you can't get graceful shapes by any other means."

His private commissions cost about £250 to £300. Recent ones include a Romney sheep for a QC who keeps a herd and a piece commissioned as a memorial to a keen mountain-biker. The rotating part is a real mountain bike wheel and it features a series of overlapping bicycle sprocket wheels. Personalised silhouette vanes of the family are also popular: The family of a chap called Carre commissioned a vane showing him driving a horse-drawn cart with his wife and children sitting in the back."

Quinnell says: "The idea that blacksmiths just turn out nostalgic stuff is wrong. Modern smiths are professionals who produce new designs." For those who are not fussed about being at the cutting edge of design there are a few British companies specialising in weathervanes (see box below), which offer high quality standard designs or commissions at competitive rates. They tend to make to order rather than keeping large stocks, so don't delay if it's a Christmas present.

By Sandra Dallas

ISBN 0 09 972701 3 PRESUMABLY quilting is to American mythology what harvest time is to ours. It is about being part of a community where everyone pulls together for the common good. It is also about being part of a community where everyone knows everyone else's business, where intimacy may bring both strain and comfort. As emblems of rural life, both quilting and harvesting are about times being better than they are now: both suggest innocence and honest labour, camaraderie, shared suffering, hearth and home. The Persian Pickle Club of the title is a quilting group run by a group of women in a small Kansas farming community. The club is the focal point of a plot in which the predominant features of traditional rural life, not to mention a local conspiracy, are investigated against a backdrop of social and economic unrest (the 1930s Depression) and the arrival of a city girl determined to unearth the community's skeletons. The plot lacks substantial originality but the book contains the makings of a really sinister novel. Its undoing, however, is a coy tone and underdeveloped narrative and characters. The prose is full of detail but it has the breathy quality of its heroine. Queenie Bean, and some of her stodgy lack of curiosity. Perhaps this is deliberate, but the effect is to diminish what might have been menacing into something prosaic and dull.

If you liked How to Make an American Quilt and Fried Green Tomatoes at the Whistle-Stop Café, you will love The Persian Pickle Club, for it is more of the same cute, softfocus American fable. It is not bad, simply unreal, and as clear a picture of American rural life as Morris Men are of Merrie Englande. This is sad since Sandra Dallas has obviously drawn inspiration from her parents' experience of the Depression: the novel is preceded by a reference to the "Fifty-cent Summer" when her father was paid half a dollar for a whole season's work.

Very little of The Persian Pickle Club has the bite, the heartbreaking quality, of this brief description. It is too cutesy for me but will appeal to many. Dallas is a good storyteller and is capable of weightier work. She would write better still if she were to dispense with sentiment and the idea that history equals recipes and old wives tales.

BOOKS

Pickled Testament from a heart of pure evil In the most horrifying book he has ever read, Marcel Berlins finds some ugly and READING this book has been the most unpleasant experience in a long career of book-reviewing. The strong temptation is to advise you to avoid it totally. But it would be wrong to do so. An Evil Love is an appalling book — the fault not of the biographer but of his subject - but a necessary one. What we learn from it is far, far more awful than anything we were told in the reports of Rosemary West's trial, hitherto our principal guide to the horrors of 25 Cromwell Street. The jury in the case heard four tape recordings made of West's interviews with the police; Geoffrey Wansell listened to 120 such tapes. He read the 100-page memoir that West wrote in prison before he hanged himself on New Year's Day 1995. He was given exclusive access disquieting truths about the mind and motives of mass-murderer Frederick West

The details that emerge of West's depraved sexual and homicidal activities - somehow made more disturbing by being set not in some seedy inner city, but near glorious, peaceful Gloucestershire country-- are too horrifying to summarise here, even in sanitised form. But why is the book needed at all? What purpose is served by recounting the hideous events?

The questions should be put in a different way. On what possible grounds can we argue that - alone of every other mass murderer in history — West does not require to be investigated and, if possible, explained? Thousands of books have been written trying to understand the inhuman cruelty of the Nazi period; every warped killer of modern times has been subjected to lengthy examination in books and articles, in the hope of finding clues that might help our society better deal with the deviants among us.

Why should West be immune from such scrutiny? Surely not because his crimes were "worse" than those of, say, the Yorkshire Ripper or Dennis Nilsen or Myra Hindley. Indeed, the greater the crimes, the greater the duty to try to come to terms with them, to learn lessons. West proved particularly difficult to pin down. He was not mad nor suffering from any accepted mental disorder: he was not commanded to do what he did by voices; he did not bear any overwhelming grudge against society; he was not exacting a horrible revenge against women because of the way he had been treated by them; he was not an addict of drink or drugs: he was not seeking some kind of grotesque fame: he did not subscribe to any dark, cultish cause requiring human sacrifice. None of the "usual" reasons for mass killing apply. He was, though, abnormally fixated on sex; he had himself been sexually abused as a child and had committed incest with both his mother and a sister. To that extent he follows the well-known cycle of abused becoming abuser. That does not, of course, explain the enormity of his depravity. In so many ways West was very ordinary: barely literate but with a kind of glib charm and a talent for telling plausible lies that enabled him to entice so many young women to 25 Cromwell Street. He was lucky, too, to find a soulmate in Rosemary. almost his equal in sexual deviancy: without the explosive chemistry between them, he might not have tortured and killed quite so often (there were certainly many more victims than the 12 to which he admitted).

Wansell assembles the sickening story clearly and dispassionately in the end, he is forced to accept that there is no explanation for West's deeds other than — and Wansell is well aware of the implications of what he is saying — the presence of pure evil. It is not a comfortable

OPERATION James Bond was a plan of Ian Fleming's to spirit away Martin Bormann from Berlin in May 1945, so the British Government could get its hands on Nazi gold held in Switzerland. The author, Christopher Creighton - not his real name of course, as he has been a secret agent since the age of 15 - took part in the operation himself. He was also responsible for side to what I believe to be a pathetically transparent hoax. Great public servants, such as Churchill and Morton, are effectively accused of conspiracy to help senior Nazis escape justice at Nuremberg. The whole story is laughably crude but some distinguished commentators - such as Milton Shulman, who is offering £20,000 to anybody able to disprove it — have been taken in by the book's absurd

Because the evidence produced is so flimsy, the dates so unspecific and the conspiracy so all-embracing, it is highly unlikely that anybody will be able to collect the money. How, for example, is it possible to prove that King George VI was not personally financing the mysterious (and probably fictional) M Section, just as his father and brother had before him? Only through common sense and the knowledge of the period, neither of which is discernible in this lf-indulgent, badly written and entirely ludicrous book.

Although the author claims have strangled enemies with his bare hands. I have little to fear from Creighton (aka John Christopher Ainsworth-Davis, aka Christopher Robin). He doubtless believes that I am only rubbishing his book because I am, of course, in the pay of the CIA, KGB and Mossad.

PENGUIN may have no plans to issue any more 60p mini-books but that has not stopped rival publishers exploiting the seemingly endless demand for cheap editions. Bloomsbury, for instance, celebrates its tenth birthday next month with the issue of a series of "Quids", ten elegantly produced titles retailing at El each. The famous names in the series include T. C. Coraghessan Boyle, Nadine Gordimer. Will Self and Joanna Trollope.

Imperiously independent in an era of media conglomeration, Bloomsbury is one of the publishing successes of the decade. It was founded by four leading publishers - Nigel Newton, Liz Calder, Alan Wherry and David Reynolds and quickly established a reputation for stylish inno-

Bloomsbury is probably best known for its literary fiction, the responsibility of Liz Calder, and, less happily, for Anna Pasternak's meretricious Princess in Love. Though a commercial and marketing triumph, it divided the directors and dismayed several important authors concerned that Bloomsbury should be associated with such tawdry

opportunism. in 1991, Bloomsbury floated on the Stock Exchange, rais ing funds for the launch of paperback, reference and children's divisions, And Calder's eye for new talent remains undimmed; last year the little-David Guterson's

It's an eccentric life, Henry

HENRY CONSTABLE has the sort of mother who stands by the door chanting, "Isn't it clarinet today, Rose ... Tom, don't forget your racquet ... Fred, remember that Peter's mother is bringing you home after drama club ... " All the Constable children had interests. Henry did not. "He would start off on something new ... then he'd feel bored."

3) Gaye Hicyilmaz describes the isolation of a disengaged 13-year-old in the midst of a busy and talented middleclass family with the zest of a social anthropologist identifying a new trend. After all, most of us have met them: the families who are always busy and proud of it, and whose multifarious activities contrast painfully with any listless cuckoo in the seething nest.

But Henry's lassitude, though admirably drawn, is a plot which leads nowhere, so when he is shipped off to stay with an eccentric genius of an uncle who runs a rather sinister private zoo, we know that there is more to it than a blossoming interest in wildlife. The story takes a grim turn with the discovery of a

Together with a love interest in the form of gypsy-like Stella and Henry's unbalanced cousin Julian, there is a disturbing sense of over-eccentricity in a story which starts with an outstanding evocation of family life, nosedives into a mystery and finishes with the moral dilemma of personal freedom. This is not to say that Hicyilmaz is anything but an extraordinarily perceptive and often very funny writer it is just that her characters are too good for plot contrivances redolent of an airport thriller.

Franklin Roosevelt in 1920: lightweight in his youth?

■ IN THE TIME OF THE AMERICANS By David Fromkin Papermac, £14,00 ISBN 0-333-63900-6

THERE'S a reverence, but not too much, about the way David Fromkin explains his country's rise to power on the world stage and the monvarion of the men who took it there. It's an ambitious task.

focusing on the generation whose political coming of age occurred during the First World War and progressing to the day in 1961 when an ageing Eisenhower handed the baton to a new breed, embodied in John Kennedy. What Fromkin - Professor of History and International Relations at Boston aims to do is show that the idealistic new democracy did not so much seek to be a prime mover as have that status thrust upon it, and that its leaders sought not gold or glory, but to change the political ways of the world to make it a better place. Fromkin argues his case well in a lucid, dispassionate prose.

out to us all on the edge of the crowd came the speech of Dan O'Connell." In the age of the soundbite, this volume is a fine reminder of the way in which the spoken word can change the world. MacArthur, who edits these pages, starts with Moses and ends with Mandela. The book is organised thematically: the section on the American Civil War is particularly fine. We even get a florid snippet of Edward Everett's two-hour address at Gettysburg; preceding here, as it did then. Lincoln's 270-word Gettysburg Address, it ighlights just how extraordinary that little speech was.

Margaret Atwood conjures magic from the story of a notorious 19th-century murder case in Canada, Elizabeth Buchan says "I AM certain of nothing," wrote Keats, "but ... the truth of the imagination."

Two things emerge from the crowded, passionately written text of Alias Grace, a fictional reconstruction of the life of a servant girl convicted for murder at the age of 16. First, the belief that, ultimately, the imagination unlocks the door to a richer landscape than an array of facts. Second, truth about any one thing is elusive, never certain and, perhaps, not important. "When you're in the middle of a story." Grace warns us, "it isn't a story at all only confusion. It's only afterwards that it becomes anything like a story." Both the historian and the novelist arrange fragments to create a picture, much as Grace creates patterns out of scraps to sew her quilts — a metaphor reflected in the slightly awkward structure of the novel, which includes poems and extracts and encompasses both first and third-person viewpoints. One of the notorious figures of her day, Grace Marks was very young and unusually good-looking when, with James McDermott, she was accused of the Montgomery-Kinnear murders in Canada in 1843. McDermott was hanged for the murder of their employer. Kinnear, but Grace's sentence was commuted to 30 years in prison, from where she continued to arouse controversy.

Was she guilty of these vicious killings? Or was she a terrified witness in thrall to the violent bully McDermott? For some, convinced that women were either incipient hysterics or devils, her guilt was incontrovertible. For others, not, An historian would take into account these contemporary attitudes towards servants and women to join up the space between the dots but this territory is, necessarily, limited. While not ignoring the social and cultural context - and, as ever, Margaret Atwood's research is a fascinating assembly of domestic and social detail - the author pushes further. In an act of liberation. Grace is allowed to speak for herself and narrate her own version of events to Dr Simon Jordan, who is researching the nervous diseases of criminals. Cool, occasionally acerbic, at times wrenchingly innocent but also deceptive, Grace describes her childhood in Ireland, emigration to Canada, the parting from her drunken father and siblings, her work as a servant and her friendship with Mary Whitney, who dies horribly from a botched abortion and whose name Grace uses when on the run. It is an account, both lyrical and lurid, that is absolutely germane to Grace's position in the social order. Flounces on a dress, laundry methods, larder arrangements, patterns on china, the spectrum of smells: these are the staples of an existence driven by drudgery and changing seasons, viewed from the bottom up. Thus, Grace watches Nancy Montgomery cavorting with Kinnear upstairs and it is significant that the butchered bodies are consigned to the cellar.

It is not a question of innocence or guilt, declares Dr Jordan, merely what you can remember. Grace's guilt remains open to interpretation. What is vital is the release of the imagination and Alias Grace is the author's gift to the dispossessed and the traditionally silent, written by a great novelist whose capacity to surprise, to challenge and to infuse her fictions with the surge and pulse of existence never fails. Yes, the absolute truth about the murders may elude us but the reader gains something far better and deeper.

The hole story

IT IS now 24 years since Richard Adams first published his now classic novel; his marketing men must be thrilled that, at last, he has returned to his patch. Naturaly, any sequel to Watership Down will sell in its thousands. The original book ended with Hazel, Fiver and chums poised at the beginnings of a new life: all their stablished the warren of their dreams. So what next? Well, not much. Tales from enemies were defeated, they Watership Down is not, actually, a sequel. "Long-awaited return" and "a worthy successor" are the phrases the publishers use — in fact. companion volume" would be the best description.

The book is divided into three sections. The first is made up of seven stories of the sort that rabbits tell each other in their burrows at night how Rabbits got their Sense of Smell, the Rabbit who beat the Fox, the Rabbit who saw a Ghost; the second has a few more adventures of the great mythical hero El-ahrairah. In Watership Down, the narrative was regularly interrupted by these folk tales. With their own language, rhythm and evocation of an oral tradition, they were part of the triumphant originality of the novel, but by no means the best part.

That was the epic journey to the Down. Fortunately, in the third section, it is to the Down that Adams returns.

The utopia which the rabbits had fought so hard to establish is now up and running. These gentle new tales are not of troubles, more hiccups in paradise - the sort of problems that beset and test any new society. They have to deal with the onset of feminism, in the shape of an Amazonian doe keen to take over the warren. There is the odd disciplinary matter, and still a few territorial issues to be ironed out with their old Efrafan foe. But Hazel proves to be a good and wise chief. equal to all these challenges - the Plato of the rabbit world. Of course, you miss the heroic struggles of the original novel, but it is still a delight to meet these characters again. Adams's style and storytelling is as sure as ever. And who knows? As the full effects of the Newbury bypass are felt on the migratory habits of the Hampshire lapine, perhaps he will find a proper sequel yet.

Michèle Roberts on how Tim Lott found tentative hope in a family tragedy TIM LOTTS very intelligently written elegy for a person and a place tells a heartbreaking tale culminating in break heartbreaking tale culminating in the samily. Absolve me, down and suicide, reveals a few family secrets and appears to be engagingly sincere. Here is a narrator who, if not omniscient, is at least reliable. His triumph is to take tragedy as his subject, and, by exploring it, create a new myth of tentative hope. The reader is harrowed, intrigued, and finally consoled.

Lott's mother Jean killed herself. Nobody could understand why. She was an apparently happy and contented woman. her retirement years with hobbies and outings. Some time previously, Lott had suffered from serious depression and had also considered topping himself. When his mother blurted out her anguish to him, just before she died, he felt he failed her by not understanding her desperation. Seeing their sadness somehow intertwined, and feeling in some way culpable, Lott set out to find an explanation for Jean's despair and his own crisis and confusion.

The pattern of his story is woven from his fascination with class, sociology and psychology. Reading this account of upper-working-class life in clean, respectable Southall in west London is like watching a surgeon dissect the heart of middle England, trying to work out why such a strongly pumping organ should weaken and give way.

Lott's great strength is his style. He writes with the imagination of a novelist. the dash of a journalist, the precision of a historian. His family saga, which begins before the Second World War, is told in a mixture of past and present tense, offers a collage of musings on old photographs, critiques of theories of depression, anecdotes of eccentric aunties and uncles, sober accounts of postwar glumness and emotional repression, and a breathtaking summing-up of culture as commodity. A decade boils down to what you can buy. Here's his wry 1970s selfportrait: "I wear plaid burn-freezer jackets with fake-fur collars, Afghan coats that smell like damp yak, purple platform boots, Donald Duck shoes, shirts with collars like ox tongues. I have an army greatcoat, bell-bottom Wranglers bleached and frayed at the bottoms, fitted leisure shirts from Michael's Men's Boutique in Ealing Broadway." As we have become accustomed to believing that you shop for a soul, that only spending money equips you with the labels that designate your values and aspirations, it might be worth noting that Lott's mother Jean did not have money of her own, for she belonged to a generation that worked non-stop in the home yet received nothing but sentimental reco

It is odd, in a book that so passionately analyses the possible causes of identity crisis and terminal depression, to find so little attention paid to gender. Lott recognises only en passant that girls of Jean's social class, in the 1940s, were offered particularly prescribed and circumscribed roles as self-denying servers of others, but he does not pursue this fleeting insight. While noting that women's liberation never got to Southall housewives in the late 1960s (though it was expressed by women factory workers of the time, not just privileged intellectuals), he does not appear to see that Jean might have been suffering from what Betty Friedan called the feminine mystique. She might have been full of inexpressible rage about her life as well as love for her husband and children.

Lott is comically deprecating about the money, freedom and treats he took for granted in the 1980s. It is clear that Jean supposed she did not deserve those. Nonetheless, I value this book for its courage, insight and provocation. So few sons write about their mothers that it is marvellous, even if sometimes frustrating, to read one who does,

CRITIC'S CHOICE RHONA CAMERON

Scotland's feisty and charming leshian comedian, probably best known as a presenter of BBC2's Gaytime TV, is cracking jokes at the Drill Hall, warming up for to her first national tour. Cameron live on stage, much less gushy than on Gaytime, has loads of bounce and acute anecdotes combined with endearing nervous energy. She is moving on from plain stand-up these days, having a shot at character comedy and bursting into song.

KATE BASSETT Drill Hall, Chenies Street, WCI (0171-637 8270). Tonight, 7.30pm and 9.30pm; £9-10, cones £6.

CRITIC'S CHOICE JAMES BLOOD ULMER His profile has dipped somewhat since 1994, when he released no less than three albums, and he has a worrying habit of arriving on stage late. But never underestimate the capacity of guitarist and singer James Blood Ulmer to pin an audience to the spot with his high-voltage mix of jazz, blues, funk and "harmolodic" music. His singing betrays the influence of Jimi Hendrix, but the 54year-old veteran's intense, "out there" style of playing was more obviously forged in the crucible of 1970s American fusion music, notably that of Ornette Coleman in whose band Ulmer played from 1974

BLUMENFELD Erwin Blumenfeld's fame as a fashion photographer for Vogue and Harper's Bazaar has obscured his many other talents and the complex personality behind them. His "fetish for beauty", as the subtitle of this comprehensive retrospective has it, is certainly visible throughout his long career, but is accompanied by an obsession with themes of sleep and death grounded in his First World War experiences. The show also makes great play with the collages, drawings and texts of his Dada time, which offer a less reassuring image. Blumenfeld's great period was from 1938. when Cecil Beaton introduced him to Vogue and he was immedfately put under contract, to the 1950s, when he became less fashionable and went back to his more experimental work. There are gorgeous pictures of the grand and the glamorous, but many that are quite unexpected.

A broken date with the deity incarnation of a Goddess. I responded to an invitation to experience the unconditional love of divine mother". turning out at an unearthly hour of the morning to seek nirvana, the quenching of a thirst. We were in a relatively new "mother" temple, hidden discreetly down a tiny pathway behind the carefully-manicured suburbs of Stoneleigh near Epsom in Surrey. The service was a satsangum, a get together with Bhagavati Sri Sri Sri Vijayeswari Devi, regarded as the incarnation of Sarasvati, Goddess of knowledge, creativity and eloquence.

The building, formerly a church, is bleak and depressing and does not do justice to the spiritual riches of the 500strong Hindu community which worships there. We sat cross-legged and shoeless before a closed, dark red curtain, behind which was seated a statue of the deity. Sri Raja Rajeswary. the divine mother herself, her two sons Ganesh and Murgan beside her.

The deities were "resting", I was told. On a podium were representations of the nine planets, all looking in different directions so as to avoid looking at each other. One stared directly at me and at the temple secretary beside me, Iswari Kamalabaskaran. At the back her husband, a local doctor who is also involved with the temple, helped the service run smoothly. Most towns in

As we waited for the curtains to be opened and the deities to be revealed when there would be a time for personal prayer and intercession - the priest, robed in traditional red, walked round the temple with incense, a bell and an offering of milk, invoking blessings of the deities both visible and invisible. Nearly an hour had passed and we were still waiting for Sri Vijayeswari,

Looking over the schedule, I had imagined that it might take its toll. And so it proved. An hour had passed, and we received the message that Sri Vijayeswari was unwell and exhausted. She needed time to rest, to prepare herself for the public recepnon with Toby Jessell, MP for Twicken ham, chairman of the Indo-British parliamentary group, the following day. Nomads gather for a party feast

Feather Report

NEARLY everyone who has a garden knows the song thrush, even though its numbers have declined recently.

The mistle (or missel) thrush is another story. It is a larger, shyer bird, with bolder spots on the breast, and white underwings that flash as it flies up. It looks almost as big as a pigeon or sparrowhawk

This is the one time of year when you see mistle thrushes in groups, rather than alone or in pairs. Loosely-knit family parties gather to feed on playing fields or other open stretches of grass. They are nomadic birds in the latter part of the year, but when one of them finds a holly tree covered with berries, or a wall adorned with ivy coming into fruit, it will make this the centre of a small territory and defend it against other mistle thrushes and blackbirds.

However, they are not hasty or greedy. At first, they will feed mainly on insects or other small creatures in the area around the holly or the ivy. They will keep the berries fiercely but silently. It is only when a large invading party comes along that you hear a lot of noise, with all of them making their rasping, churring calls.

Their song is much more beautiful. It is a wild outburst of notes, delivered usually from the top branch of a tall tree. But it has an oddly abrupt ending each time. as though the singer had been cut off. Song thrushes begin singing, at any rate in the south of England, some time in November, but mistle thrushes are not much heard before Christmas. They continue singing up to midsummer, but I always think of their song as a winter song.

From the arid regions of Africa and Asia, gerbils have been popular in Britain since the 1960s. But beware, that male and female you bought for company will breed every three weeks

Homely oasis for a desert rat

Roswell was given a Today she has 150 of them in her Surrey home and the number is still rising. If anxious parents see this as a warning, they should note that Mrs Roswell's brood was no accident. She planned to have that many gerbils, keeping showing. However, it is true that the gerbil can be a prolific

"Gerbils make brilliant pets," says Linda Walker, the keeper in charge of the Children's Zoo at London Zoo, where the pet care centre has a small number in a big glass tank. "They are fascinating animals to keep and to watch. them for either breeding or They are active by day and night, they are very clean and don't smell, and they are easily handled — that is, as long as you are gentle with them and you start handling them when they are young."

Never pick them up by the tail, though, because it can come away in your hand, an escape mechanism which the animals use in the wild if another creature tries to get hold of them. It can only be used once, though, because the tail does not grow back. Gerbils have only been kept as pets in Britain since the 1960s. In the desert and semidesert conditions of Africa and central Asia there are more than 80 different species of this rodent, although the most popular one in Britain is the Mongolian gerbil because it is friendly, inquisitive and easy to tame.

An average price for a young gerbil, either bought from a pet shop or a breeder, is anisation which has a Web site (see box) and links with similar organisations abroad, recommends buying a gerbil at between six to eight weeks of age. At this stage, it is old enough to be separated from its parents but young enough to be tarned quite easily.

he Golden Agouti, sandy in colour with dark hairs down the length of its spine, is the most popular variety, but there are many other colours including black and white. Because they are such sociable creatures, it is best to keep two or more in a cage rather than just one, but there can be problems. Females from the same litter are better disposed towards each other than males. Introducing adults of either sex from different litters

will fight. An adult is any gerbil older than 13 weeks, and the best age to introduce new animals is eight weeks.

If you want to breed gerbils then make the obvious match but be warned: they start early at between eight and 12 weeks. Females come into season for only a few hours roughly every six days. Pregnancy itself lasts just over three weeks but after giving birth the female will come into season again immediately. The female's reproductive life varies from seven to 20 months. An average litter size is four to six while the maximum number of litters is usually about ten. At home, gerbils can either live in a plastic-bottomed cage with wire top and sides. or in what is termed a gerbilarium. a large aquarium tank with wire mesh cover, which can be bought new for about £30. The latter has the advantage of allowing owners easy observation of these busy little animals and, because they love digging and burrowing, it stops their bed from spilling be placed out of direct sunlight and away from draught. ber is how adept gerbils are at the art of escape. One young owner, Tom Botterill. remembers only too clearly his disappointment some years ago when he returned from school to find that his two male gerbils had burrowed out of their run in the garden. Since then the Botterills have seen large numbers of gerbils pass through their Cumbrian home. "After the others had escaped I got a pair called Salt and Pepper, which I thought were males but a few and Pepper have had eight

Gerbils do not often nip or bite their owners but Tom can vouch for their sharp teeth: "One of them chewed through the bars where it had been soldered together, and another one chewed up a plastic wheel which was in the cage."

When it comes to real food, though, the maxim is "don't overfeed". Gerbils should be given a dessertspoonful of food a day. This should be made up of a typical hamster mix available from pet shops supplemented with raw vegetables. Always clear away the left overs every day.

In the desert gerbils don't get much water so they take very little when they are kept as pets. A water bottle on the side of the cage is preferable to a dish in the cage, which may well get buried by tunnelling. Always keep the water fresh.

Mrs Roswell says gerbils should always have a piece of wood in their cage to gnaw on. while a cardboard tube gives them hours of endless tunnelling pleasure. A toilet roll tube chewing contest is often on the agenda at gerbil shows. so your cardboard may not last Gerbils are generally healthy creatures — sore noses from bar chewing is the most common complaint - with an average lifespan of three years. For me, their endearing traits are when they stand on their hind legs and look around and when they groom each other. One will do the grooming and the other will lie back and enjoy it." A Vet Writes ...

EVERYONE IS living longer nowadays, and pet owners longer still. A pet's longevity varies from one species to another for various reasons - some of them contradictory.

Size is important. Tiny animals have short lives. Few mice celebrate three birthdays, although one is supposed to have lasted for seven years, seven months. Hamsters struggle to reach their fourth birthday, rats may celebrate five anniversaries, guinea pigs can look forward to seven and rabbits reach double figures.

But then we get to dogs. The smaller varieties live longer. The giants - St Bernards, Great Danes, Irish wolfhounds, tipping the scales at 50kg - are very old at ten. That's middle-age to the little ones, weighing lokg or less -Cairns. Poms, Jack Russells and Pekes go on to their late teens and beyond.

Cats usually live longer than dogs. Many reach 20 years, and the oldest cats on record passed their 30th birthday. At least three of them lived in Devon - must be something to do with the cream.

Think about lifespan when choosing a pet. Hamsters, mice and gerbils will have departed this life when their ten-year-old owner reaches 14. But a rabbit may live long enough to attend the christening of its young owner's first-born.

Big birds live longer than little ones. Most budgies and canaries are old at 12 but large parrots can outlive their owners. Macaws and cockatoos go on into their seventies and some have reached 100.

Tortoises have very long lives perhaps because they exert themselves only rarely and retreat into their shells when life gets stressful. A spur-thighed tortoise called Ali Pasha, picked up from the beach in 1915 during the Gallipoli landings, must have been close to his 100th birthday when he died recently. A radiated tortoise given to Captain Cook in 1777 survived until 1966 - 189 years. If you believe in reincarnation and want to return to the longest life possible. come back as a tortoise.

Christmas holidays: A four-page festive special starts with the splendours of Prague and deserted Venice

In love with a cold climate here never was a King Wenceslas, good or otherwise. The luth-century Duke of Bohemia of that name must, however, have been a pretty decent fellow, since Prague's vast 600-year-old central square is named after him, and his statue crowns its sensational vista.

I had coffee (with whipped cream, it goes without saying, in this increasingly sybaritic city) at the swirlingly Art Nouveau Grand Hotel Europa, where it had been worth fighting for a seat to get a window position. From there—on the Feast of Stephen, Boxing Day—I could look out on the snow which lay round about the square, reasonably crisp and even, though not excessively deep.

Vaclavske namesti (its Czech name) was swarming with tourists, all paying no attention whatever to traffic rules. When I first visited the square, before the Communists were evicted in 1989, one of the grimly authoritarian police tried to arrest me for crossing in the wrong place.

Now—as I found on returning to the city on an eminently civilised. art-orientated, Christmas tour—in Vaclav Havel's Czech Republic almost anything goes most anything goes.

But not all manifestations are attractive. Western commercialism has embellished too many of Prague's stunning buildings with tawdry advertisements for multinational consumer products.

Wenceslas Square is lined with shops selling junk. A handsome mid-18th-century pink-faced baroque palace has been turned into the Black Jack casino.

The city's taxi-drivers would win an Olympic gold medal for rapacious rip-offs, their meters whizzing brazenly round like roulette wheels gone berserk.

got to the stage where I ignored the demanded fare and paid what I thought the trip had been worth. a course of action which met with only token expostulation from the ruffianlike drivers.

Yet, if liberty has bedizened the prettiest of European capital cities with such ultracommercialism that even ambulances are sponsored, the end of Communism has meant that the Czechs can now welcome visitors with attractive hotels and with a huge choice of acceptable restaurants, instead of the former dour handful of eating places where patrons were lucky to find even a few offerings.

Prague, in fact, now has all the appurtenances needed to please tourists, including shops worth shopping in — for Bohemian glass and the local speciality of garnet jewellery.

But the greatest pleasure is, of course, Prague itself. Look down from the heights of the vast, fairytale castle and you see a city of spires and towers scattered on either side of Smetana's Vltava river. The view, more dazzling than that of Florence (with green roofs instead of the Tuscan red), is made even more wondrous by winter's white ornamentation. Wander around the castle and

And then you are in Old Town Square, where the intoxicating medley of buildings includes the best glass shop in town and the house where Kafka is said to have lived as a teenager. The square's huge space, filled with more market stalls, in December is adorned with a huge, bossy Christmas tree surrounded by smaller, humbler ones: the leaves of all of them laden with genuine, as distinct from tinsel, snow. A jazz band brightens things up even further. Return at night, when floodlighting makes the snow-bedecked scene magical.

reedom has vulgarised even this place, which is over-protected by thuggish young security men who do not permit access to, or even photography of, the ancient cemetery, with its thousands of tombstones.

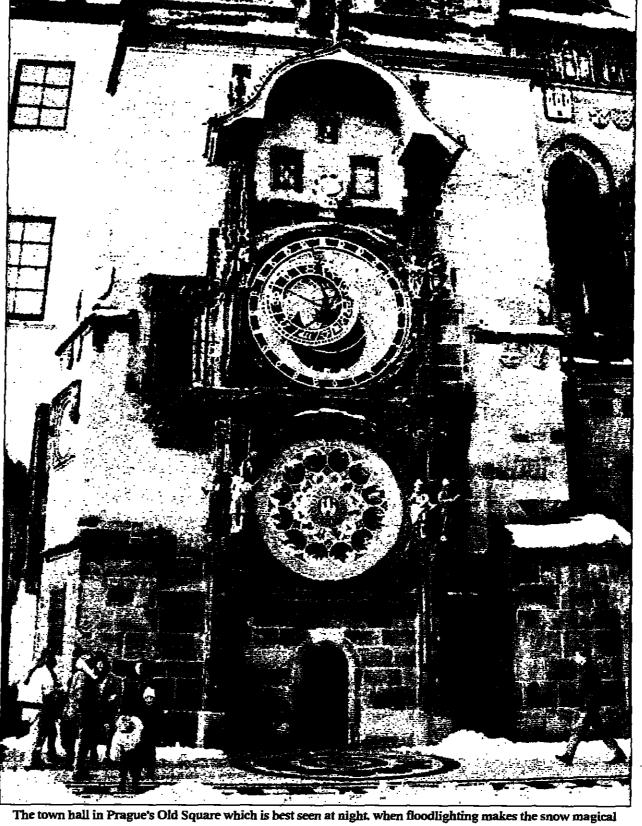

Even so, the place manages to be beautiful and moving. The quaint 13th-century Old-New synagogue persisted in maintaining worship under the Communists. On the walls of the more imposing 16th-century Pinkas synagogue are inscribed the names of thousands of Nazi victims.

Even with grim memories of the past, it is impossible to be sad for long in Prague. If all else fails to lift the spirit, the music will succeed. Ar Christmas, in the castles, churches and palaces, there is music everywhere: Smetana, Dvorak, Janacek and Martinu, of course, but also unexpected composers. One concert poster promised Telemann, Bach—and Berlin. The work by Berlin (arranged by P Cibuch) was a little item called White Christmas.

Above all, there is Mozart. For while the Salzburg that made Mozart miserable in his lifetime now exploits him voraciously. Amadeus was cosseted in Prague where exteriors for the film of Peter Shaffer's play were filmed. At the Bertramka, a villa now turned Mozart museum, Don Giovanni was completed. The night before the dress rehearsal, its composer dined at Count Thun's palace, now the British Ambassador's residence. At the Estates theatre, Don Giovanni received its world premiere.

Prague has three opera houses. The 19th-century State Opera is rococo run amok, with gold leaf, white stucco, caryatids — you name it, they've got it. The National Opera House is gilded, angelled and frescoed to within an inch of its life.

At the Estates, a dinky little auditorium built in 1783 and a marvel of green and gold, I saw the next best thing to Don Giovanni: an imaginative production of The Magic Flute. I finished off the evening at the Pod Kridlem restaurant, a luxurious place (though, by Western standards, without huntrious prices).

Take my tip. Instead of dreaming of Berlin's White Christmas, experience one among the snow-covered spires of Prague. It can be very cold but the welcome in these democratic days is warm.

Unmistakable Venetian class

at the church of San Samuele across the Grand Canal from Ca' Rezzonico, the baroque palace, once the home of Robert Browning and now the museum of 18th-century Venice. It was our first night and we had listened to the young violinists of Interpreti Veneziani playing glorious Bach and Vivaldi but now it was time to return to our hotel.

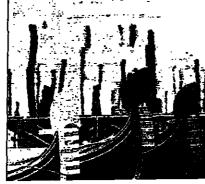

now it was time to return to our hotel.

It was January 5. Venice was deserted.
Only a few Venetians, huddled against the cold, stood awaiting the vaporetto back to St Mark's. Snow started to fall and we chugged along the canal — surely one of the the world's finest journeys — with snow flakes falling against a moonlit sky and the backdrop of one of Venice's greatest icons, the church of Santa Maria della Salute.

On such nights there is a grandeur about Venice that no other city on earth can match, it is truly magical — but pity the journalist who dates to try to stand comparison with Henry James. Mary McCarthy or James Morris in capturing its glory. Morris evokes the Venice I experienced in January: "All is dank, swirling, desolate, if you stand still for a sudden moment, allowing the echo of your steps to retreat around a corner, you will hear only the said slapping of the water on a tethered Doat, the distant clanging of a fog bell, or the deep boom of clanging of a fog bell, or the deep boom of red and green and gold among the elegant Christmas decorations lingering in the shop windows, many advertising sales. It is Mary McCarthy who understands another of Venice's most potent spells—its power to awaken the philistine dozing in the sceptic's breast. There are so few tourists in January that there are no queues for the great museums, the smaller churches can be admired in solitude and there are seats in Florian's and Quadri's, even Harry's Bar (where the pasta is delicious but stunningly expensive). The streets of the Dorsoduro can be walked without encountering many Venetians let alone tourists. On my previous visit to the Accademia, we had to queue for an hour. In January we walked

Tiepolo, Tintoretto, Giorione and Carpaccio without being jostled. We enjoyed the churches of Santa Maria dei Miracoli, San Pantalon or the Tintoretto's mighty Crucifixion in the Scuola Grande as if being given a private view. Many restaurants were preparing to straight in and were able to appreciate close for their brief holiday before the Carnival but it was easy to book in those that were still open. The Ristoranti della Buona Accoglienza Venezia (RBAV) group—12 restaurants dotted along the Grand Canal—was a revelation, each small, cheerful, used mainly by locals, and serving decently priced, authentic Venetian food. We particuarly enjoyed the Alla Madonna near the Rialto, where there always seems to be a queue, and the Vini da Gigio near the Ca' d'Oro.

Snow fell only briefly, it was cold and we suffered intermittent rain but the duckboards only added to our sense of adventure. After Christmas and New Year, Venice in January made a perfect overture to the weeks of work ahead.

Anguilla, you may recall, is the tiny Caribbean island which did its zany bit for the Swinging Sixties by staging a revolution against independence from Britain. An Ealing comedy come true, Wilson's "Bay of Piglets" had as happy an ending, with the rebel handful remaining loval subjects of the Crown as was their wish, rather than submit to the sway of their bigbrother neighbours St Kitts and Nevis, with whom they had been yoked for centuries are friendlier than ever, and this British Crown colony, now the proud possessor of its own Leeward Islands' crown. Only 16 miles long and at most three wide, it has 30 dazzlingly white beaches along its 45-mile coastline, facing north and east to the Atlantic, south and west to the Caribbean.

Of the dozen and more Caribbean islands I have visited. Anguilla is the collector's item I would rather keep to myself. So tiny a place can scarcely bear the weight of the superlatives it merits: not just the nicest people for leagues around, but the quietest and most beautiful beaches, the most luxurious hotels, the widest range of haute cuisine restaurants - at high, but not the highest, prices.

Anguilla is even more beguiling, while less chi-chi and expensive, than nearby St

Antigua is more than worth the extra burst of energy after the ten-hour flight from London. But for all Anguilla's touching devotion to the Queen, who dropped in for a day in 1994, absurdly few Britons make the effort: little more than 2,000 a year, or barely 6 per cent of Anguilla's 35,000 annual visitors. Some may have been deerred by false memories of the 1960s "revolution", more by the after-effects of 1995's Hurricane Louis. But Anguillians, as a member of their tourist board didn't need to tell me, are "a very resilient people". With few exceptions, the main hotels and restaurants are all back in business, in better shape than ever.

This was Pairick Leigh Fermor's impression as he passed through Austria in 1934 on his epic walk up the Rhine and down the Danube towards Constantinople, and it mirrors my own more than 60 years later on an equally brief visit to this gem of a city. Leigh Fermor turned his back on the peaks of the Tyrol because the swarms of happy skiers made him feel "lonely and out of things".

My daughter and I could not linger either, partly out of fear of freezing to the spot on an icy December weekend, but mainly because we were greedily cramming Salzburg and Vienna into one short

There was time enough, though, to do the Salzburg essentials, beginning of course, on a Christmas visit, with the Christkindlmarkt in the cathedral square. Advent markets are a Christmas tradition all over Germany and Austria, but here are no makeshift stalls with flapping plastic awnings and cheap, tawdry goods. In these temples to high taste with prices to match, the stalls form miniature villages of wooden alpine chalets, exquisitely decorated with natural foliage and sparkling with tiny white lights.

Here Slade do not belt out their raucous Christmas pop hit over a crackling tannoy: instead, a sweet-voiced choir on the cathedral steps chimes out Stille Nacht, Heilige Nacht, written by a priestly son of Salzburg 170 years ago, and as its last notes fade the Salzburg church bells take up the chime, until it rebounds endlessly from the walls of the Hohensalzburg fortress that dominates the skyline.

And what is for sale? Mountains and mountains of Christmas decorations in all possible shapes and colours, all exquisitely hand-crafted, once by alpine farming communities in the long, isolated winters, now perhaps with rather less romantic origins.

Fragile glass ornaments. hand-painted with village scenes; pottery bells and baubles and candle-holders; advent wreaths and garlands;

and on the stalls with the biggest crowds around them,

carved Nativity sets. And there is food and drink to keep spirits high and noses from dropping off in the crisp night air, steaming mugs of glühwein or hot punch, stalls offering baked potatoes and apples, bratwurst of every size, with or without mustard and sauerkraut, doughnuts and roasted chestnuts. And not a plastic cup or discarded carton in sight. Salzburg is chic.

By day we explored the smart shops on the Getreidegasse and the arcaded courtyards which surround it, we saw the second-morteage price tags. We pecked into the marble hall of the baroque Mirabell palace, now used for weddings and concerts, and jumped up and down the steps in the Mirabell gardens which ethoed to Julie Andrews in The Sound of Music.

We duly paid homage at Mozart's birthplace, and on a clear, frosty Saturday night took the cable car up to the lith-century fortress to hear a fine chamber concert of his music, plus an unforgettable finale provided by the Almer Alphornquartett - four strapping chaps in lederhosen with 12-foot Alpine horns. I can > embrace of a coffee-house for a Mélange und Sachertorte (frothy coffee and divine chocolate cake) to recover. The mother of all advent markets is here, the Wiener Christkindlmarkt in the grounds of the fairytale palace that is Vienna's Rathaus, or hall. Here a city of miniature chalets dispenses more exquisite crafts, more glühwein, more fun. Upstairs n the Rathaus's magnificent festival hall, a succession of choirs from around the world took the stage to proclaim the triumph of the skies; downstairs children made, baked and painted their own crafts in supervised workshops; out-side in the sparkling air, lights twinkled and shoppers jostled and glühwein steamed in mugs and I paid far too much for a tiny, fragile, hand-painted tinkling glass bell that takes pride of place on my tree. Vienna plus Salzburg just before Christmas does not equal a perfect world. But it comes close, and if you can barely recall the taste of pure, undiluted Christmas spirit, this will bring it flooding back.

Where rhyme and reason prevail

The folklorist Sabine Baring-Gould published an infec-tious ditty in 1880 with a illing tune and a complex refrain that neither rhymes nor scans. The song tells of seven over-optimistic vokels and an ill-fated day out on the back of a borrowed horse. The mical tale rapidly became standard fare in the drawing rooms of Victorian England. The farming community of Widecombe in the Moor has been making hay ever

Throughout the year, an esti-mated one million visitors from all over the world wend their way to the village on the eastern edge of Dartmoor, in search of ... Unde

Tom Cobley and all". Eight verses and a chorus have ensured that Widecombe remains the most popular tourist venue in the 365 square miles of National Park. On the second Tuesday of every September, up to 10,000 people flock to the Widecombe Fair of the song.

Tom Cobley lives on, both in spirit and guise. There was no mistaking the Devon burr, the top hat, smock, hobnail boots and clipclopping grey mare. Farmer Peter Hicks came to Widecombe with his parents, as a boy of 15, in 1948. Now, aged 64, he has convincingly assumed the role of Uncle Tom at Widecombe Fair for the past ten years. He confided: "Originally I had a false beard, but it was horrible to wear, so for the last four WIDECOMBE FAIR

Tom Pearse, Tom Pearse, lend me your grey mare, All along, down along, out along lee. For I want to go to Widecombe Fair, Wi' Bill Brewer, Jan Stewer, Peter Gurney, Peter Davy, Dan'l Whiddon, Harry Hawk, Old Uncle Tom Cobley and all Old Uncle Tom Cobley and all years, I've grown my own and then had it shaved it off for charity." There appears to have been a real Tom Cobley who lived 20 miles away in the village of Spreyton and died in 1790, long before Widecombe Fair existed. But the musical tale of seven men out on an ili-fated spree could well have been Widecombe's joke at the expense of Spreyton people. Several variations of the song were doing the rounds of the West Country in the 19th century. It is possible that Widecombe's version just happened to be the one that Baring-Gould collected.

In the chill of an autumn evening, a cheery grey gaggle of septuagenarians was making tracks towards the coach park. In high summer, squadrons of four buses land here from eight in the morning onwards. Beneath the yew tree in the church square, Uncle Tom Cobley eyed the Old Forge, now a complex of shops, and reflected on what used to be. Years ago. I'd have my horse shod there," he said. "The place next door had petrol pumps outside, You could buy anything, from a bootlace to a kettle . . . and Sexton's Cottage had a sexton living in it."

🕆 exton Cottage is now a National Trust shop. In other former contages, Tom Cobley and his hapless fellows ride in endless circles around the sides of commemorative mugs. Grey mares plod linen landscapes. Figurines stand snub-nosed, ruddyfaced and ready, Bill Brewers and Jan Stewers, rural stereotypes to a

The 14th-century Old Inn serves venison and Widecombe Wallop on draught. The smaller, folksier Rugglestone Inn does deep dish pies and a free pint for Uncle Tom Cobley on Fair Day. The Wayside Café announces itself with an astonishing teapot sign that appears to be five feet wide from handle to spout. Yet here is a place that has defied decades of commercialisation to remain strikingly beautiful.

Just 600 people live among the scattering of ancient hamlets and farmsteads that comprise the wider parish of Widecombe-in-the-Moor. With its population of no more than 60, the main village snuggles in the wide valley of the East Webburn River.

Its parish church, dating from the 13th century, and which actively welcomes visitors, is known as the Cathedral of the Moor. Whoever coined the name probably first viewed St Pancras from the brow of the long hill that sweeps down into Widecombe from Haytor. Here, the contour lines are so close you could plait them. To the right, stand the granite outcrops of Honeybag Tors. Glowering above it all is Hamel Beacon, more than 500 metres above sea level. As if in celebration of its surroundings, the church tower soars 135 feet high above a patchwork of Saxon hill farms. This would have been the first and last view of Widecombe that Cobley and his six friends would have had. It was here that Tom Pearse "seed his old mare down a-making her will".

In the village, shops were clos-ing. From one of any number of smallholdings, a lone calf bawled to the skies, to be answered by another in a neighbouring hamlet. In the stiffening breeze, the church tower appeared to sway against the swirling cloud. With the last coach party long gone, heifers and ponies appeared from nowhere to graze beneath the horse chestnuts on Widecombe Green. Around the corner, Widecombe children played ball. Last year, the village school received a new library from the profits of the Fair that takes place, conveniently, in the six-acre field opposite.

Come the millennium, Wide-combe Fair, with its show horses, terrier racing and tug-of-war, will be celebrating its 150th anniversary. A village store and post office opens every morning, as it always has done. Widecombe sells most things, but not its soul.

Great training for children

disguise - as a parent of small children or, preferably, a small child yourself. Great Western Trains has introduced the Family Carriage, a compartment added to its InterCity trains at the weekend to do what it says, basically - get families together and stick them in one place, iving the rest of the train free to travel in peace.

You can tell the Family Carriage by the yellow sticker in each of the windows. Those unblessed by children should watch out for it, or they may suffer the fate of the grown-up passengers on the day we caught the train at Paddington. One man, pleased at finding a choice position, on his own and with a proper table to put his things on, visibly aged when the compartment began filling up with pleasure-bent juveniles. We been there, and three hours on the rails seemed the outer limit of the children's capacity to be quiet. We were wrong, of course, but it seemed a good idea at the time.

Our eight-year-old, Eve, was looking forward to the free activity pack promised as part of the FC Experience. Our we had no idea what she was looking forward to. Babies are like that: enigmatic. Our seats were reserved for free, which was handy. The children got the window seats. Grace stood up and looked out. The train started up. By the time it reached the end of the platform Grace had grown bored with looking out of the window. Three hours started to seem like a very long time. We got the activity packs from the buffet car, and Eve got on with the puzzles while

f you go down to the train were going to Plymouth for a Grace threw the complimentoday, you'd better go in long weekend. We'd never tary playing cards around the tary playing cards around the compartment. A pile of rubbish was growing on the table, with nowhere to put it. Helpful tip for Great Western: put rubbish bins in the Family Carriage (they have, after all, got them in the largely deserted first-class compartments).
And another helpful tip: put the Family Carriage at the end middle. Having it bang up against the buffet car meant everyone who wanted to get to the car had to manoeuvre their way past Grace. But on the whole the idea is a good one. You can reserve your seats for nothing, and when you're on board the pecking order reads: children first, the rest nowhere, a significant advance in a world in which most people seem either to be childless, or forgotten what it was like to be one.

By the same token, a hotel where children are treated as anything other than devils should be given an extra star, or perhaps a red badge of courage. Ours in Plymouth, overlooking the spectacular Hoe, had a children's play area, stocked with toys that didn't look as though they had been picked up at a car boot sale, an indoor swimming pool, and outdoor activity centre, and the sort of dining room staff that made you feel they really didn't mind when a baby threw a tantrum because she was tired and her dad had to take her, and his dinner, back up to the room. Presumably the same app lied to the cleaning staff when they discovered the soft fruits decorating the carpet and the several dozen bath towels required to dry two small bodies, but possibly not.

And so to Plymouth and the chance to use Great Western's discount vouchers, giving money off or two-for-one entrance to rainy-day attractions all over the Great Western stamping ground, including London. We could have gone

So we ducked out of the wind (very windy place, Plymouth, as Drake could have told you) and went through the Dome, a trip through the town's past with what appeared to be smells of the time in the mock-up of a l6thcentury street scene.

For the older trippers, a video about the time the Luftwaffe tried to flatten the hilly town was a chiller. Eve seemed to be more interested in the TV-telescope, which gave her a closer-up view of the ships in Plymouth Sound. Grace settled for a go on the bouncy castle wobbling on a patch of greenery overlooking the Sound. Babies tend to favour the physical over the intellectual emerged from the church at Monte, where I had been gazing at the tomb of Karl I, the last Habsburg emperor, who lived in Madeira in exile until his untimely death in 1922. A hawker urged me to buy a pack of embroidered handkerchiefs, a local speciality. I declined. He insisted. I declined. Then he swore at me, in a colourful manner but not menacingly. Eventually I decoded the abuse: it was his mispronounced version of "Four quid".

You expect the occasional bit of foul language as you wander around Europe. But not in Madeira, the most decorous resort imaginable. It's not exactly packed with the young and the loud. Indeed, a press release proudly announces that the average age of the visitor has plummeted from 54 to 51. I suspect these figures are doctored by taking into account the occasional baby and globetrotting grandchild. The true statistics are probably down from 91 to 87.

Madeira's reputation as a resort for the twilight generation shouldn't put you off. The wonderful thing about old folk is that they don't move fast. A party of six, with men sporting white moustaches and cravats, moved so slowly at Gatwick that they didn't make it to the gate on time and our plane, by then taxiing to the runway, had to turn back to pick them up. (I am not making this up.)

On Maderia, the oldies tend to stay put, sipping tea at Reid's hotel or contemplating the Atlantic from their hotel balconies, leaving the rest of the island free for the under-eighties minority to explore. Even on the coolest days they are by the pool, half-clothed, soaking up the cloud-rays.

Madeira may sound deadly, but it's not. It is that rarest of holiday places: a resort that has kept its dignity. There are one or two pubs, but of the smarter kind, and a few tourist-trap restaurants near the marina in the capital. Funchal, but you won't find fish and chip shops or signs proclaiming "Wir sprechen Deutsch",

What makes the island enthralling is its unlikely variety. The even climate means that those content to doze by the pool can do so undisturbed, but visitors with a tad more

MADEIRA FACT FILE

■ Cadogan Holidays, 9-10 Portland Street, Southampton SO14 7EB (01703 332661) offers seven nights at the 5-star Madeira Palacio Hotel, based on twin occupancy and including breakfast and flights, from £482 to £864. Similar packages at the 5-star defure Reid's Hotel are from £769 to £1,565.

■ A three-course fish dinner, including wine, at an informal

adventurousness will find plenty to explore. Wander inland from Funchal or Ribeira Brava and you immediately enter a fabulous subtropical landscape of steeply terraced volcanic mountains, strewn with seemingly inaccessible vineyards and vegetable plots.

rom here the roads wind up into the mountains, offering ever more spectacular views. To the west there is a plateau, and then the landscape changes again, this time to an approximation of Scottish moorland. At Rabacal, you can walk through woods reminiscent of a Mediterranean pine forest to the Risco waterfall. Madeira, indeed, is a walker's paradise, with thousands of kilometres of well-maintained paths that follow the levadas, irrigation channels created by the Moors many centuries ago.

The north coast is more desolate than the intensely cultivated south shore. Here cliffs plunge down to the ocean and the roads hug the rock so closely they sometimes pass beneath waterfalls, giving cars a dousing. At Porto Moniz, you can eat copiously and cheaply on restaurant terraces overlooking a shoreline of jagged black volcanic rocks against which Atlantic breakers pound. Not that the south

Cabo Girao. And at

Eira, just north of Funchal, is a hillside viewing platform 1,100 metres up and looking down on to the vine-terraced village of Curral das Freiras, set in a bowl surrounded by vertiginous mountains.

Funchal suffers from urban sprawl but the old centre, largely pedestrianised, retains buildings that reflect Portuguese imperial grandeur, monumentalised in the island's dark.

volcanic stone. The cathedral, mostly dull, has a superb wooden roof, but

azulejos, the ornamental tiles found wherever the Portuguese flag flies.

Near the town are old mansions, such as the Quinta da Cruzes, now a museum set among lush subtropical gardens. Even outside the confines of gardens, along any mountain road,

Madeira has managed to retain its dignity—no fish and chip shops here the borders are ablaze with azalea, lily, orchid, and nasturtium. In the centre of Funchal is the Sao Francisco wine lodge, the headquarters of the Madeira Wine Company. The fortified wine has been produced here for centuries, and the organised tours include tastings. There are four styles of madeira, which from driest sweetest are called Sercial, Verdelho, Bual, and Malmsey, each named after a different grape variety. The rule with madeira is: the older the better. Five-year-old wines are good, and ten and 15-year-olds can be superb, but younger wines are made from the Tinta Negra Mole grape, which usually lacks distinction. With madeira, you get what you pay for. A glass of 1882 Verdelho will set you gastronomic paradise, but there is abundant fresh fish. The speciality is espada, scabbard fish, usually served with fried bananas. Better still are grouper and sea bream, cooked simply with butter, herbs and garlic. The freshest fish I encountered was at the tiny O Jango restaurant in east Funchal, where, as at any good fish restaurant, you can select your own creature before the cook gets to work.

If you want lager and discos, Madeira is probably not for you. But for an equable climate, relaxation, good walks, inspiring landscape, tennis, and indolence it's a hard place to match.

GUIDE TO

The Place de Furstenberg, off Boulevard St Germain, is beautiful, with cobbles and broadleafed trees, but just off the square is Eugene Delacroix's old workshop and apartment, one of the most charming and smallest museums in Paris.

Delacroix is immediately recognisable as the man on the back of the Fr100 note, and as one of France's finest 19th-century painters. His major works, including The 28th of Juh, Algerian Women, The Prisoner of Chillon. Don Juan. Jewish Musicians and The Death of Sardanapale are in the Louvre. The little

Musée Delacroix is more about the atmosphere of a Left Bank studio than about his grandest works - there are a few oil portraits, but mostly sketches and studies are on show. The artist moved to Rue Furstenberg 1857 towards the end of his life, when he found himself exhausted by the walk from his old apartment to the church of Saint-Sulpice, where he was painting one of the chapels. His rooms were not large but there was a walled garden where he decided to build a studio. By this time he was well established and not short of cash, so the result is more a classical temple than a garden shed.

Like many people, Delacroix had trouble with his builders, and waited eight months before his studio was ready. "Half the workmen aren't reliable," he moaned, "and the other half are lazy or too expensive... this has caused great annoyance." The eventual result was a cream, stone building with a frieze over the front door and enormous windows and skylights.

Delacroix came to find his apartment delightful, with its view at the front over a cobbled courtyard and the flowerboxes of his neighbours, and behind over his garden, which is still a place where visitors can sit and escape the bustle of the boulevards.

He lived with his longtime housekeeper, Jenny Le Guillou, and there are two portraits of her — one as a young girl with an unfortunate snubnose, and later as a mature woman, grave in a bonnet. In the hall, there is an enormous bust of Delacroix, with pointy moustache and demi-beard. A foppish scarf falls from his neck. His paintings and sketches are displayed in what was once his bedroom, library and salon. A few pieces of his furniture are dotted about, but the most interesting is his metallined mahogany painting table in the studio. In glass cases there are his original palettes, still thick with carefully ranged paint.

There are also letters to friends, such as the writer George Sand and Baudelaire, who wrote a poem in wrote a poem in honour of the painter, perhaps referring to his gloomy backgrounds: "Delacroix, lake of blood/Haunted by wicked angels/Shaded by a wood of evergreen pines."

The Delacroix museum is a pleasant stop on a wander around St-Germain, where he lived until his death at home in 1863. From here it is a five-minute walk to Saint-Sulpice, past the Marché St-Germain. In the church, he worked on the Saints-Anges chapel for more than a decade, and there are two more paintings.

The Delacroix Left Bank tour can be completed with a coffee in the Café de la Mairie, opposite Saint-Sulpice, where, no doubt, Delacroix occasionally took lunch.

ONE OF the scourges of modern chess is the amazing proliferation of openings theory connected with the increasingly popular Sicilian Defence. In their championship match last year, for example, Anand could make absolutely no progress against Kasparov's Drag-on Variation of the Sicilian, constantly being surprised by new twists in Black's openings.

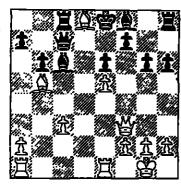

One way to take the fun out of the Sicilian for Black is to play 2 c3. simply aiming to construct a broad pawn centre with d4. This is a favourite of British number two. Michael Adams, it avoids most of the main line theory, and Black's task of equalising is harder than was previously thought. Here are two recent examples, both featuring amazing strikes by White's dark squared bishop.

WINNING MOVE By Raymond Keene This position is from the game Khmelnitsky - Alburt, US Champ-ionship 1996. White's kingside play has achieved for him the powerful combination of a bishop on g7 and a pawn on fo. This alliance severely restricts the black king and White

BRIDGE by Robert Sheehan

KEEN PAIRS do plenty of homework on their systems, but there's nothing like a disaster at the table to clear your thinking on a tricky understanding.

In a recent practice match Forrester and Robson's new germ warfare weapon attacked its own side, but that means the Mark II version will be in good shape for the upcoming Olympiad in Rhodes. What would you bid on this hand:

♦8642 ♥92 ♦A9 ♣KJ864 You are North; this is the auction:

Your partner's opening of Two Spades shows a moderate hand (say 7-11 points) with either both majors or both minors, usually 5-5. Don't stop reading now just because you don't play such methods - the decision is about logic, not system. Your raise to Three Spades says that is where you want to play if your partner has the

In addition you must be able to play in at least Four Clubs if your partner has the minors. That's not a conventional agreement, but just common sense — if you couldn't support a minor you couldn't afford to bid Three Spades, as that would leave you stranded if South did not have the majors. The opposition tell you that the double of Three Spades is for takeout, and West's pass of the redouble shows a bad hand. With this information. Robson passed, hop-

East bravely stood his ground and also passed. A major bug had been found in the system — this was the full deal:

The defence took five spades and five hearts for a penalty of 3,400. East's double of Three Spades doesn't look take-out to me, but it led to a great result. Forrester's redouble apparently showed a minor-suited hand with longer diamonds. 3NT would show equal length, and Four Clubs longer clubs. All very well in theory, but a touch impractical (not normally a Forrester weakness). Nevertheless redouble denied holding spades. If South had spades what else could he do but pass three spades doubled, and take his medicine? That is why Robson might have removed three spades redoubled. Pity we don't have photographs on the Games page; one of Forrester's face when dummy revealed his spade holding might have been amusing.

ing East would run somewhere. COMPUTER GAMES AND PASTIMES

SHORT OF undertaking a course in advanced computing, and get-ting to grips with the gobbledegook language of programming, the chances of most of us making our own computer games have been slight, until now. But 1996 will go down as the year when multimedia authoring came to the masses.

Two of the first multimedia authoring titles have quickly become market-leaders, Corel's Click & Create and the Scala Multi-Media MM100. Others will follow imminently, including the first full version on a games console. Although there have been some valiant attempts to allow our imagination to run away a little. these have generally offered only a handful of choices and, therefore, been of limited appeal. One example was Micro Machines 96 from Codernasters, which allowed players to design their own obstaclelittered courses but nothing else. True multimedia authoring should be a logical process and allow you to start with a completely blank canvas — and take gaming ideas off in any direction you like. First and foremost, of course, you need to come up with a really good idea. Once you've got that you can get going - designing everything from simple platform games sophisticated business to sims, deciding every detail from the characters and backgrounds to technical scoring systems and even reward sequences.

Corel's Click & Create uses graphics-led interface, allowing you to drag and drop objects into playing fields, and this approach makes it especially easy for designing platform titles. Productions are built up through a storyboard editor, which gives a clear overview with thumbnail images of the screens, text and events as they occur chronologically. Three further editors — time line, frame and event — help you keep track of the shape of creations as they get more complicated. At any stage you can test an application with a single click.

The title comes with a wide choice of fonts, clip art images. video clips, animation sequences, sound files and backgrounds, though others may easily be imported from outside sources. The great drawback to Click & Create is the massive memory requirements

Win a Scala authoring kit by creating a game or multimedia experience

- to run smoothly on Windows 95, at least 12 Mb Ram is recommended. The Scala MultiMedia MM100 CD-Rom also makes hefty demands on your hardware but it comes with a viable alternative - a slimmed down version on two floopy disks for loading on to lesser machines, such as laptops. Revolv-ing around a text-based "script" instead of a storyboard editor,

THE I STENET CROSSWORD

Scala lists the events and their timings in a bold main menu. Scripts are flexible, allowing you to create pages and events out of turn and slip them into the running order wherever you want.

On the whole the approach is extremely slick and highly intuitive; even sophisticated presentation tricks can be carried off with just a few clicks. Text, for instance, can fly into vision, rotate a few times then simply fade away.

Scala also comes with its own extensive library of impressive ready-made effects and screens - including backgrounds, music files and sound clips — as well as a clutch of solid demos. Programmes can also be tested at any stage through their development with a simple run option which is cancelled at any point with the Esc button. And so to Cyberspace Twenty-

Six, a knock-out competition offer-ing ten readers the chance to win copies of the excellent Scala Multi-Media MM100 worth £149.99 and, later, make a bid for the big prize of £1,000 worth of Microsoft software. To enter you are invited to invent a unique game or enticing multimedia experience which you would like to make if you were to win a Scala authoring kit. Our ten win-ners will then be given one month to try to turn their wild inventions into reality using the Scala programme and submit their saved efforts for final judging. The finished product deemed most successful will go on to win its author the Microsoft library of at least 25 of the company's best-selling titles.

The competition is open to readers aged 11 and over and entries should be between 100 and 200 words. The judges will favour ideas as outlandish as you like so long as they also seem feasible. Marks will be added for originality and humour. Send your entries, which must include your name, age, address and home telephone number to: Cyberspace Twenty-Six, Computer Games and Pastimes, Weekend, The Times, 1 Pennington Street. London El 9XN. The closing date is midnight on Wednesday, October 2. The judges' verdict is final and they will not enter into additional correspondence.

Free from charges

Banking with First Direct is free because we never charge Cheque Account customers for everyday banking transactions, even if you're overdrawn. And all our customers automatically receive an overdraft up to £250 - also free of any fees. So compared to other high street bank accounts you're better off with First Direct from day one. We're a member of the worldwide HSBC Group which is one of the largest banking and financial services organisations in the world, and in the course of a year you'll find we offer more cost effective current account banking. And the service we provide means you benefit in many other ways too.

By telephone, 24 hours a day

We provide the ultimate in convenience. You can bank with us at any time, 365 days (and nights) of the year, from wherever there's a telephone. And all UK calls are charged at local rates.

Personal and professional service

Every call is answered by our Banking Representatives. They have all they need at their fingertips to deal with your day-to-day banking needs. And when you require more specialised assistance, such as foreign currency, they can instantly refer you to someone who can help.

Getting cash is easy

Every Cheque Account customer receives the First Direct Card. This allows you to withdraw up to £500 a day from over 9,000 cash machines around the UK, including those of Midland. It also guarantees cheques for £100 and includes the Switch payment facility.

So is paying bills

Our service includes a free bill payment service too. Simply call, tell us who to pay, how much and when, and we do it. This means you can pay all your bills at the most convenient time without the need to keep having to remember to organise it.

A full banking service with more benefits

As well as our Cheque Account we offer saving, borrowing, travel and insurance services cost effectively by telephone. Take saving; our rates are always competitive, we offer instant transfers to and from your Cheque Account and a complete range of accounts. So your money is always working hard without the need for you to do the same.

We work hard to maintain the service

The best people to demonstrate the quality of a banking service are its customers - 85%* of ours have recommended us to their friends and colleagues in the last 12 months.

Opening an account is easy too

We also appreciate how daunting changing bank accounts can be. So we make it easy. Easy to open a First Direct account, then easy to arrange for your salary to be paid in and easy for all your standing orders and direct debits to be transferred to your account. And it's easy (and free) to find out more right now. Call us on 0800 24 24 24 or complete the coupor

Helen Pridham says it is vital to see what your policy covers before you become ill

Check the small print while you can

The growing number of private medical insurance policies on the market is making the task of choosing the right one ever more difficult. Not only are more insurers competing for business, but each has several policies. PPP alone offers seven healthcare schemes. In total, there are now well over 100 policies on sale.

By this time next year, the choice will have grown further. with three or four more providers expected to offer medical insurance. Rising competition may be good for consumers in some ways, but it is also increasing confusion.

Penny O'Nions, a medical insurance specialist, says: "There is more and more fudging going on, particularly in the case of middle-range policies. It is becoming increasingly difficult to compare like with like."

Each company uses a different format to present its policies and descriptions of benefits are not always clear. The Office of Fair Trading criticised such complexities this summer. John Bridgeman, its Director. said: "The combination of medical matters and insurance makes these products doubly difficult to understand and almost impossible to compare."

The OFT wants policies presented in a common format. Mrs O'Nions believes that improvements will not come until the sector is regulated. "If nothing is done, people will be encouraged to buy unsuitable policies and another scandal on the lines of the mis-selling of personal pension policies will occur," she savs.

What features should con-sumers be aware of? Almost all policies fully refund the cost of inputient treatment, including hospital accommodation, fees for theatre, surgeons and other specialists, dressings and drugs. ome lower-cost policies restrict the type or number of hospitals

The trend in the NHS and the private sector is to limit the length of inpatient stays and, if possible, avoid them. Increasingly, treatment is taking place as day care or in outnatient clinics.

Medical insurers will pay only for hospital stays recommended by a specialist. It is important to check just how much cover is provided towards outpatient treatment. Many policies limit these benefits. Some budget plans do not cover outpatient costs at all or only if they are directly associated with inpatient treatment. Many buyers of low-cost or budget plans have not realised the implications of their decision, and this is leading to a growing flood of complaints to insurers. George Conneily, of Health Care Matters, a Dorset adviser, said most people who buy budget plans assume that they are missing out only on unimportant frills.

In a simple case, an initial, consultation with a specialist may cost £70 to £80, a couple of straightforward procedures such as a blood test and an Xray to establish more about your condition would cost another E80, and a follow-up consultation a further £60. However, some tests, such as scans, cost between £300 and £850.

So the total bill could well run into four figures. Although Bupa recently improved outpatient benefits on its policies, many advisers believe it has not gone far enough. On its popular Bupa-Care policy diagnostics are covered in full, but payments for other outpatient expenses, such as consultations with specialists or physiotherapy, are restricted to between £500 and £800, depending on the three to six months before they see a specialist on the NHS. Their policy will come into effect if inpatient cover is recommended, but they will have iost out on the main agvantag of private medical insurance, which is faster treatment.

Not all policies put limits on outpatient costs. Among those with full refund schemes are OHRA. PrimeHealth and BCWA. Cigna, an American insurer launching a new individual policy next week, is also expected to adopt this approach. In addition, it promises to cover other "hidden costs". especially when children need

WEEKEND MONEY LETTERS

Taxation and personal pensions

From Mr R. Kirtley
Sir. I read with interest your articles on pensions (Weekend Money, August 31) and would like to comment on certain aspects rarely mentioned on

Our Personal Choice mortgage has an option where you don't even have to tell us how much you earn. This is particularly good news if you're a company director or self-employed. This option is available on initial loans of up to 75% of the property valuation, and, naturally it offers all the flexibility you expect of our Personal Choice scheme. You can amend your payment schedule to either pay more or less, take payment holidays within a preset limit and even capital raise up to £50,000. (You can also have a cheque book.) Our variable rate of 6.99% (APR 7.3% Typical) is very competitive for the flexibility it offers.

So if you need a mortgage flexible

By RICHARD EVANS, RACING CORRESPONDENT

THE glory attached to win-However, after a decent ning a classic race may not carry a price tag but the first prize of £174,688.40 on offer for landing the Pertemps St Leger at Doncaster today will be of special significance to two Titans of the Turt. The pennies, as well as the the pounds, matter as Henry Cecil and Saeed Bin Suroor. the licence holder for Sheikh Mohammed's Godolphin operation, are now locked in an epic duel for the trainers' championship.

Beneath the calm exterior presented by Cecil, there is a burning desire to win the coveted title for an eleventh time and prove a point to Sheikh Mohammed after their much-publicised split last year. With Cecil holding a narrow lead over the Godolphin trainer, the outcome of today's classic could be crucial in deciding the title.

While Flying Legend takes his chance after winning a decent handicap at Newmarket in a canter three weeks ago, Cecil's main hope of victory lies with Dushyantor. The Khaled Abdulla-owned son of Sadler's Wells carried this column's hopes in the Derby, where only the determination of Pat Eddery enabled him to finish second after meeting interference. The hard race at Epsom was almost certainly responsible for a subsequent below-par effort in the Irish equivalent.

rather idle on the Newmarket gallops but of late he has worked with zest.

"Willie Ryan, who rides him a lot at home, feels he is a much better horse than before. We must be very hopeful he runs well," Cecil said. "He has benefited from the York race and the St Leger trip is the one thing he does need."

Shanton finished just over a length behind Dushyantor at Epsom and won recently on chance will be compromised by this ground," Gosden confirmed yesterday. Gordi has been the best easy ground at Windsor.

However, the fast conditions will count against the John Gosden-trained runner. "His backed runner this week and the Dermot Weld-trained winner of the Queen's Vase is a potent threat, along with Mons, who ran Dushyantor to half a length at York.

However, in the largest St Leger field since 1982, it will be no surprise if Cecil keeps an eye on Sharaf Kabeer, the Godolphin runner whom Dettori has deserted. A year ago, Classic Cliche, a former Warren Place inmate transferred to Godolphin, beat the Cecil-trained Minds Music.

The understandable anguish felt by Cecil that day can give way this time to joy as DUSHYANTOR provides him with a third classic this year - and puts the trainers' crown within his grasp.

☐ Clerkenwell may miss the St Leger. The colt has a sore heel and a decision about his participation will be made

Bahhare strengthens classic case

BY JULIAN MUSCAT

BAHHARE, who dominated opponents on looks, strengthened his position as favourite for next season's 2.00 Guineas with a recordbreaking victory in the Laurent-Perrier Champagne Stakes over seven furlongs at Doncaster yesterday .

The son of Woodman stalked a steady pace before taking control approaching the final furlong, quickening away from In Command by 34 lengths. Once in front, he extended his advantage with every stride as Willie Carson furthered his education by driving him out to the line.

It was an impressive performance in almust every respect. The time, at Imin 23,21sec, lowered the juvenile course record by more than a second with the help of a following wind. He was impressive, his . ainer, John Dunlop, said. "He settled well in behind, and quickened nicely. It is always good when a horse comes out and wins a proper

Among bookmakers, William Hill gave Bahhare the biggest vote of confidence, quoting him at 5-1. Ladbrokes and Coral offer a point longer. but there was an element of uncertainty about Bahhare's true mettle, which arose when he was asked to quicken.

Bahhare momentarily wobbled when Carson picked him up. And he threatened to flash his tail — often a sign of temperament - with each stroke of Carson's whip. "I noticed it." Dunlop conceded. It was the first time in his life he's been hit, and it came as a bit of a surprise. Willie said he is still a bit of a baby."

Given that he also played up before consenting to enter the stalls, the more prudent will wait for further racecourse evidence before feting this unbeaten colt.

That is unlikely to come this term, as Dunlop intimated Bahhare's season has run its course. Bahhare's superiority over in Command was not quite as emphatic as that posted by Revoque at York last month.

Revoque, engaged in vesterday's test, was withdrawn on account of the fast ground, but his worth should be established, against Zamindar at Longchamp tomorrow. There is much to play for on the

GOODWOOD

BBC 1 _15: The absence of a confirmed front-runner could reduce this to more of a sprint, which entitles Mv Best Valentine to the vote. He returned to his best at Chester last time. Law Commission, another in top form, has claims for a place. Of the others, Tarawa reserves his best efforts for straight tracks while Resounder weakened on his sole outing over this trip.

2.45: Wall Street made the running when a respectable fourth in France last time but appears more effective when held up. This faster ground should help him and Farasan, who may oblige with the early pace. Singspiel is the class act but he has flattered to deceive in the past. Prize Giving, a winner first time up this season, cannot be discounted. 3.15: Oggi, who returned from reported muscular problems to win at Haydock, can follow up. 3.40: see facing page. 4.15: Ninia is on a roll and, provided she is none the varse for her exertions at Epsom on Wednesday when winning by six lengths from Clan Ben, she can land her fourth race inside a month. Angus-G and Clifton Fox filled the places behind her at Sandown a formight ago but are drawn wide and reoppose on only marginally better terms. Serendipity can be forgiven a poor run on unsuitably soft ground at Goodwood and looks a threat judged on earlier form. 4.45: Clement Freud may not thank me for suggesting that Nagnagnag is the bet of the

Longchamp offers hints to Arc puzzle

CLUES to the Prix de l'Arc de Triomphe should be plentiful on a fascinating programme at Longchamp tomorrow. The Paris track stages the Prix Vermeille (3.05). Prix Niel (3.35) and Prix Foy (4.35), with two-year-olds catered for by the Prix de la Salamandre (4.05). The Niel, Salamandre and Foy will be shown live. and a recording of the Vermeille, on BBC2.

Geoff Wragg runs Pentire. the King George winner, in the Prix Foy, in which the sternest opposition could come from André Fabre's Coronation Cup winner, Swain. The Prix Niel features the reappearance of the Arc favourite, Helissio, who returns after a summer break. He may have most to fear from the Aga Khan's well-regarded Darazari and Peter Chapple-Hyam's Polaris Flight.

The Prix Vermeille has drawn Bint Salsabil and Papering from Britain. However. Fahre could have the answer with his three-strong challenge of Miss Tahiti, Luna Wells and Tulipa.

Fabre's juvenile, Zamindar. returns after a surprise defeat in the Prix Morny at Deauville to tackle a field which includes Chapple-Hyam's Revoque, rerouted from the Champagne Stakes at Doncaster.

ON AND on and on goes of the second round. Davies would rather that than have Laura Davies, seemingly immune to tiredness and oblivious to boredom. When her colleagues leave the women's golf tour after three or four tournaments in a row, in order to have some relaxation, she catches a plane or jumps into her car and heads for the next extraordinary talents may be her strength of mind and physique. This is her eighth successive week of competitive golf, the Solheim Cup at St Pierre next week will be her ninth and two more events follow that match before she will allow herself a week off. All this — and perhaps because of it - and she is still playing some of the best and most consistent golf of her life, as a 66, six under par, in the Wilkinson Sword Ladies English Open at The Oxfordshire demonstrated vesterday.

Not the least of Davies's

she and Marie-Laure de Lorenzi, one of her playing partners and another member of Europe's Solheim Cup team, made the course look easy, which it palpably was not. Their two rounds totalled 14 under par on a day when only 12 other golfers were able to beat par. De Lorenzi went round in 64, breaking the year-old course record held by Laura Navarro. She is nine under par, two strokes ahead of Helen Alfredsson, who added a 70 to her first-round 67. Davies and Navarro are both six under par.

"I am going so well I have to keep going," Davies, who leads the United States money-list and lies second in the European one, said. "You can't throw in the towel. Every round seems so important. There always seems to be

Scotland, meanwhile, recovered from a 3½-1½ foursomes deficit to record a 9-6 victory over Wales, the 1993 European champions, who collected the wooden spoon for the third year in a row. England laid the foundations for their triumph with a commanding foursomes display, after which they led by 4-0 with one match halved. When Alfredsson teed off at lunchtime, she did not not realise how well de Lorenzi, who had just finished, had scored. She was not alone. Spectators found it difficult to keep track of the scores, too. and perhaps this was why there were so few people watching. The official attendance was between 1,500 and

.From the moment Alfredsson left the 1st tee until she reached the 6th there was no way of knowing how she was doing unless you followed and counted her every stroke. At a tournament of this stature it would have been a help to have had mobile scoreboards with the leaders. The people carrying such boards would have been better employed than were those few marshals carrying ones saying 'Silence' on them, which they rather shamefacedly held up from time to time. Many of the matches did not have enough spectators to make a noise.

A round with Alfredsson contains more than the normal share of diversions. She fidgets at the address, continually regripping with her right hand and, just when it looks as though she is going to start her backswing, she stops one third of the way back to examine her hands in relation to the clubface. When her 18foot putt on the 6th headed towards the hole she leaned forward like a fencer and, as the ball caught the left lip, swung to the right and eventually disappeared, she did a little dance.

Brown tightens England grip

BY PATRICIA DAVIES

ON A glorious September gem of a day that the East Lothian tourist board would not dare publicise for fear of breaching the Trade Descriptions Act, England induced some local gloom when they beat Scotland to win the women's home internationals for the fifth successive year, at Longniddry yesterday. It was close enough to give the respective supporters the heebie-jeebies, but Scotland put themselves on the back foot by losing the foursomes. 2-1, when the series should, by rights, have been shared at worst. In the decisive third match. Mhairi McKay and Laura Moffat took three putts from just off the edge of the green at the 18th to lose to Joanne Hockley and Fiona Brown.

Brown, who holed a tester from five feet for a winning birdie four, had a good day, for she also earned the point Hilary Monaghan on the 17th after wins by Anne Laing, the Scottish champion, and Mc-Kay had given Scotland hope, with Lesley Nicholson on the way to victory against Karen Stupples.

However, Kim Rostron, who won all her singles, had a fine win against Alison Rose, and Rebecca Hudson, who won all four of her matches, played too well for Moffat, her fellow teenager, so all eyes were on Brown and Monaghan.

Brown won the 10th when Monaghan missed a short putt and hit a wedge stiff at the 11th, to go two up. Monaghan holed from 20 feet to win the 13th, but drove into the rough at the 15th, to go two down again, and two halves in par saw Brown, and England, clad in tartan trews,

The wooden spoon had red ribbons on it as Wales, so season, slithered to defeat in the singles against Ireland. Ireland, who had lost to Scotland and England after winning the foursomes, barnboozled Wales by reversing the trend. Ireland lost the foursomes 2-1 — their top pair free-falling from five up after ten holes to one down after 18 but lost only one of the singles, the meeting of the champions, in which Lisa Dermott beat Barbara Hackett on the last.

Woosnam out to steal Montgomerie's morning glory

FROM MEL WEBB IN PARIS

Woosnam is the sort of fellow who likes to land the first punch, but he reckons that he has been denied the chance to do that lately in his catchweight contest against Colin Montgomerie for the undisputed European moneyearning title — and Woosnam, feisty little slugger that he is, is not happy about it.

Woosnam, aching and racked with pain from spondylitis in his perenially sus-pect back, completed a 68 to take a one-shot advantage over Montgomerie into the third round of the Lancome Trophy at St Nom-la-Breteche yesterday, then claimed that the machinations of the PGA European Tour's computer were giving Montgomerie too many chances to strike the initial blow.

"One of the things that frustrates me is the fact that Colin always seems to play early on Thursday mornings and I always seem to play late." he said. "It seems to me that, if he can get a good score in on the first morning, it puts me under more pressure.

"I know that for the past three weeks he played early. and he's played early eight or nine times this season. I don't know if that's the draw or if he has asked for it. I know they always try to split us up, but he always seems to have the early start. I have not asked about it - but I'm going to." Woosnam, who shares the lead with Jesper Parnevik on 135, five under par, has the glint of battle in his eyes. A long career has obviously not dulled his ambition, and he would like nothing more than to put a spoke in Montgomerie's wheel as he attempts to finish top of the money-list for the fourth successive year.

Yes, I'm determined about the order of merit," Woosnam said. "Somebody's got to stop him. I'm playing well, so I don't see why I shouldn't have a go."
Woosnam's complaints were met with open delight by Montgomerie, who had a level-par 70, a round saved by an eagle on the loth and a

LIKE most fighters, Ian birdie on the 18th. "Ah, he's worried now." Montgomerie said. "That's great. He doesn't like me going first? I don't have a problem with that, I'm pleased he does."

Montgomerie said that he had not asked for early starts on Thursdays; in fact, if given the choice, he would actually prefer to play late on Thursday and early on Friday. That way, you're keeping going, so that there's no big gap between playing," he said.

Indeed it might. The generally held assumption here seems to be that the £108,330 on offer to the winner will go either to Montgomerie or Woosnam. Their cricketing vocabulary scarcely recognises attrition, so the six hours that they batted at Sophia Gardens yesterday, chipping out runs with painstaking care, must seemed like a confinement in the dentist's chair. To remain involved in the title race, however, there was no other way. The Cardiff pitch is a slow torture to Surrey, for it diminishes their natural game with bat and ball. In their less stoical days, they would have perished playing cavalier

Laney keeps the Kent attack at bay

BY PAT GIBSON

JASON LANEY, the Hampshire opening batsman, showed why many thought that he was unlucky not to be chosen for the England A tour of Australia by frustrating Kent in their effort to maintain an outside chance of winning the county championship.

Laney, 23. defied some hostile bowling from McCague and Headley to score his fourth century in his first full season, completing 1,000 runs on the way. His 105 took him a little more than four hours, contained 18 fours and helped Hampshire to reach 249 for five in reply to Kent's 445.

The day had started brightly enough for Kent. Llong, with a career-best 130, and Ealham, with 74, his highest score of the season, took their fifth-wicket stand to 173, but then they lost their last six wickets for 23 in nine overs.

Kent did not bowl or field as well as they would have liked, either, and, when Smith went for 60 off the last ball of the day, from Ealham. Hampshire were only 47 runs short of saving the follow-on.

strokes, but they settled for the anathema of the long crawl, an essential purgatory in their quest to do no worse than draw this penultimate game.

Even before play resumed. Surrey had accepted that maximum points for Leicestershire, the leaders, was a brisk formality at Durham. Alec Stewart, the Surrey captain, thus adjusted his sights to a minimum of nine points from this fixture, so that the championship remains accessible if they win their final game and Leicestershire are beaten.

To that end, they are wellplaced. Graham Thorpe, batting with rare restraint and Nadeem Shahid shored up the innings against the threat of two probing spin bowlers on a dustbowl. Surrey should now achieve parity, or something the pitch does not deteriorate markedly when they bat again on Monday.

By then they will have the incalculable boost of a trophy secured, provided that they win the Sunday league fixture tomorrow, and it is not yet beyond them to win this game, too. Their bowling, however, is too one-dimensional for pitches of this nature and they needed seven overs with the new ball yesterday to take the final Glamorgan wicket.

were no more than a prologue before the introduction of spin. Robert Croft, whose every appearance here has attracted applause, such is his sudden elevation to national hero, appeared for the tenth over and immediately stifled shotmaking. In his eleventh

TALK about a curate's egg of an innings. Graham Gooch made 82. displaying the form that he has been in all season, and Stuart Law showed the imperious disregard of a topclass Australian batsman, yet Essex ultimately had some thing of a struggle to gain maximum batting points. Sussex, whose lead amounted to just three runs, survived the two overs that they were left with before the close. Nothing seemed more certain than that Gooch and Law would make centuries. If they were not both intensely professional cricketers, it would be tempting to say that they found the bowling to be less than challenging. One drove a near half-volley from Kirtley straight back to him and the other lofted Phillips, who is almost as new to the first-class game, straight to mid-off. Gooch is the leading run-

So it was important that others contributed if Essex were to obtain four batting points. Hussain added 44. also without undue concern on this easy pitch, but he too. contrived to lose his wicket. chasing a wide one from Drakes. Irani struck 43 in his uninhibited way and Rollins. the wicketkeeper, came up with one or two exquisite drives in his 27.

That Essex gained their final batting point was down to Cowan and Such, who made 52 for the ninth wicket. It was as much fun for the crowd as it was excruciating for the bowlers. Bicknell, who had survived two confident leg-before appeals. was cleverly drawn down the pitch and routinely stumped. In the next over Butcher was smartly taken, low at leg slip, off the developing left-arm spin of Dean Cosker. Surrey were rocking.

Thorpe's usual response is to attack and, briefly, so he did. He cut Croft voraciously before settling for self-preservation. He managed to run out his captain, calling for a non-existent single to James at cover, but then added 99 with impressively-organised Shahid before his three-hour vigil ended with a slip catch off

Gough back in full swing for Yorkshire

BY JACK BAILEY

IT WAS quite like old times as Yorkshire swept Nottinghamshire aside to win by an innings and six runs. For a time it looked as though Nottinghamshire would make Yorkshire work hard for victory. They took the last eight first-innings Yorkshire wickets for 101 runs, and limited their lead to 123. During a shower-scattered afternoon they had reduced that by 53 runs without losing a wicket. Then it all fell apart.

Pollard and Robinson were settled when White had his first bowl of the match on a rain-freshened wicket. He gained leg-before decisions against Robinson and Archer and then bowled Pollard. This opened the door for length and gaining reverse swing, scythed through the Nottinghamshire middleorder during a devastating spell of 20 balls in which he took four wickets for six runs. Gough then needed less than two overs of the extra half hour to complete the victory and return figures of six for 36.

RUGBY UNION: IMPACT OF LEAGUE PLAYERS MAY GIVE ENGLAND CAUSE FOR SECOND THOUGHTS

BY DAVID HANDS RUGBY CORRESPONDENT

PERHAPS it is as well that England have postponed their training session at Bisham Abbey next Wednesday. If the Courage Clubs Championship matches today build on the impact made in Anglo-Welsh competition during the week by rugby league players, the national management may well be having second thoughts, and not merely because their present squad seems to be drifting further away with each passing day.

Yet the advent of the shortterm contracted players -Henry Paul and Jason Robinson at Bath, Gary Connolly at Harlequins — only serve to increase England's difficulties. The team management vants to see the best of English-qualified players breaking through; instead, the development of some must inevitably be held back by the presence of former rugby league players as well as the overseas players who have flooded into England.

It would be slightly different if the likes of the Paul brothers (Robbie, the younger, has yet to make his debut for Harlequins) were contemplating a long-term future in rugby union and a change of national affiliation. Both were born in New Zealand and Henry has made seven international appearances for the Kiwis, but the presence in the family tree of a grandfather from Liverpool gives him an English qualification.

At 22, his best years are to come, but in which code of rugby? Sensibly, he has warded off probing questions about a possible international career with England by pointing out that, thus far, he has played only one game of union. "I admire the All Blacks, but, realistically, New Zealanders playing overseas won't get picked which, in a way, is a credit to the New Zealand management," Paul said.

"If England showed any interest in me, that would be a terrific compliment, but I can't look any further down the track. At the moment, John Hall [the Bath director of rugbyl is showing a lot of faith in Jason and me by playing us with the guys who have done it week in and week out in first grade. Now it's up to us to show why he has done that." Indeed, Paul takes the place against Wasps today of Phil de Glanville, the Bath captain, who deserves a rest and the chance for an ankle injury to recover. Rest is going to be as important in the professional era as play. Brian Ashton, the Bath coach, believes that his club will be involved in 41 matches if they are successful in all competitions this season - and that makes no allowance for international rugby. "In three games so far, we have given first-team places to 27 players, but I would hope that no one plays more than 22 watering collection of centre pairings on show today that would grace any international. The older Paul teams up with Jeremy Guscott, briefly Bath's captain, against Va'aiga Tuigamala and Nick Greenstock, the 1995 young player of the year, and Harlequins display Connolly in tandem with Will Carling against a London Irish pair not so far short of representative honours, Rob Henderson and Paul Flood.

The upshot is a mouth-

The introduction of Tuigamala is the only change from the XV which played so attractively against Saracens last Sunday and offers Green-stock a wonderful opportunity to learn more of his trade. Tuigamala, 27, won 19 caps for New Zealand before joining Wigan nearly three years ago and has, according to Nigel Melville, settled into union again with ease. "We won't just be sending him banging at Henry Paul and Jeremy lingering effects of a back injury and will join Damian Cronin, a fellow Scot and British Isles lock, at Wasps.

Elsewhere, Northampton restore Paul Grayson to standoff half against Bristol, while Leicester give Lewis Moody a league 'debut at flanker against Orrell after Eric Miller's call-up to the Irish XV which plays Leinster at Donnybrook tomorrow. Moody, at 18 years and 94 days, is the youngest player to appear for . Leicester in the competition and he is joined by Gary Becconsall after injuries remove two other scrum halves, Austin Healey and Aadel Kardooni.

Mike James, the Swansea chairman, has resigned for personal reasons after six years in the post, on the eve of

Dunvant. Both clubs are unbeaten in the Welsh League, but Swansea, humbled by Bath in midweek, restore a swathe of internationals including Stuart Evans, Christian Loader, Paul Arnold and Stuart Davies to the pack. Bentley poised to agree Newcastle deal

SPORT IN BRIEF

JOHN BENTLEY, the Halifax Blue Sox wing has withdrawn from Great Britain's rugby league tour of Papua New Guinea, Fiji and New Zealand because he is about to sign a contract to play rugby union with Newcastle. Bentley. 29. will play for the Courage Clubs Championship second division side until the start of the 1997 Super League season. Neither the Blue Sox nor Newcastle were prepared to comment on Bentley's decision, but it is understood that he has agreed a a similar deal to those agreed with union clubs by Gary Connolly, Va'aiga Tuigamala and Henry Paul.

Sheffield Eagles have signed a ten-year agreement with Sheffield United to play their Super League games at Bramall Lane. The deal begins at the start of next season.

Hamed targets Barrera

BOXING: Naseem Hamed could meet Marco Antonio Barrera, the unbeaten Mexican, in March in Great Britain (Srikumar Sen writes). Barrera is believed to be the biggest threat to Hamed, the World Boxing Organisation (WBO) featherweight champion from Sheffield.

Yesterday Frank Warren, Hamed's promoter, offered £1.2 million for Barrera, the WBO super-bantamweight champion, to box in Britain. Barrera's camp countered with £1.75 million for them to meet in Los Angeles.

Sciandri squeezed out

CYCLING: A stage victory in the Tour of Spain continues to elude Max Sciandri, of Great Britain, who twice took the lead in the final two kilometres of the 150-kilometre seventh stage, from Malaga to Marbella, yesterday. Sciandri made his final effort inside the last kilometre and went clear by ten metres, but he was eventually beaten by Fabio Baldato, the overall leader, and Giovanni Lombardi, both of Italy.

Makinen well placed

MOTOR RALLYING: Tommi Makinen, of Finland, is well placed to secure the world championship after the opening day of the Rally Australia. Makinen, one of five drivers in second place, will become world champion if he wins the event and Carlos Sainz, of Spain, finishes lower than second. Sainz, however, is leading the field. Colin McRae, the reigning champion, is in the pack in second place.

Prean snubs England

TABLE TENNIS: Carl Prean, who refused to play for England all of last season, will not play in England's opening match of the European League season today, against Turkey at St Austell. Prean says that he has club commitments in the German Bundesliga that take priority over England's campaign to win promotion to the super

Doohan closes on title

MOTORCYCLING: Michael Doohan, the 500cc world champion, hopes not only to retain his title at the Catalan Grand Prix this weekend, but also to put Alex Criville in his place. Second will be enough for Doohan, from Australia, to take his third consecutive title, but he is keen to reassert control after Criville, from Spain, who grew up close to the Montmelo circuit, won in Austria and the Czech Republic.

THE TIMES GUIDE TO THE PREMIERSHIP THIS WEEKEND

ASTON VILLA

Villa's snore draw with Helsingborgs IF on Tuesday, in the Uefa Cup, had many supporters drifting off into the Land of Nod. It is thus alarming to hear that Brian Little is considering installing sleeping quarters at Villa's Bodymoor Heath training ground, to bring the facilities into line with many continental clubs. Perhaps it explains why be embarked on a recent talent-spotting trip to Holland to ch' k out the form of the little-known Dutch striker, Rip van Winkle.

EVERTON

Everton's season is only a month old, and they have already been on a roller-coaster of form and expectations. "Given the quality of the opposition, everyone in football thought we had a good start," Joe Royle, the manager, said. "Now, two defeats in four days, and they are trying to create a crisis around us." Today, in an attempt to rectify the problen., Royle is contemplating giving Michael Branch, the 17-year-old England Under-21 forward, his Goodison debut.

SHEFFIELD WEDNESDAY

and wily experience will ensure that it all does not end in tears, he says.

Confused? This is Pleat we are talking about. Wednesday are still top, but their winning run is over, and now the first real pressure is on. "We had to expect a defeat, and the test is just how we will react." he said. Newsome looks likely to return on Monday against Arsenal, with Stefanovic precocious talent. Bridges is expected to make his Premiership debut at Derby today

after claiming a midweek reserve hat-trick.

Lionel Perez, a 29-year-old French goalkeep-er signed for £200,000 from Bordeaux, will be on the bench. Peter Reid, the manager, is

English and, more important, rapid im-encouraged by Perez's willingness to provement in coping with crosses.

Michael Bridges was discovered by Jack Hixon, the veteran

North East-based scout who first identified Alan Shearer's

BLACKBURN ROVERS

Grim times at Ewood Park, but for one Blackburn man there is a shaft of blue and white light. Last Monday, Chris Sutton made his first start in eight months, and now he has been offered the chance of replacing Alan Shearer. "It will be easier for Chris because the fans have already accepted him." Ray Harford, the manager, said. Sutton claims that he is no longer the rogue who got into trouble in the early part of his career. He is likely to be partnered by the returning Gallacher today.

LEEDS UNITED

The rumours linking George

Graham with half the Arsenal staff can be discounted - for the moment. "I'm going to took at the situation here and the players here," Graham said yesterday, "and I have to give everybody an opportunity. Then, if we need to get new players in, I will do so." But if the players are not being jettisoned immediately, the tactics are. Graham is expected to revert to 4-4-2. "The first priority is to get it right at the back and build from there." Plus ca change ... PB

Tomorrow, Chelsea receive an Aston Villa team brought badly to earth in midweek in the Uefa Cup by modest Swedish opposition. David Pleat, Sheffield Wednesday's manager, felt that Chelsea were lucky to win at Hillsborough last weekend. That they did suggests that they have started to realise that games last all of 90 minutes. Craig Burley showed that the skills of Vialli. Lebocuf and Di Matteo are beginning to rub off on the Brits. Hitchcock replaces the injured Kharine in goal.

Leicester look good, but are they flattering to deceive? Martin O'Neill, the manager, has described his side as "scintillating" and "brilliant". Those words, however. hide an element of frustration. For all their possession and organisation, Leicester have scored just three times this season, with no hint of the instinctive, almost scrappy type of goal tha, the best strikers tend to collect. Ian Marshall could make his full debut at Anfield tomorrow after his recent £800,000 move from Ipswich.

COVENTRY CITY

Coventry's abject plight - no wins, one point secured, one goal scored - is likely to be overshadowed at Highfield Road this afternoon by the much-heralded return to football of George Graham, in his latest guise as manager of Leeds United. The anticipated attendant media circus will probably concentrate on Graham's splendid resurrection rather than City's continued dernise, which already appears to b spiralling out of control. Three cheers for good old George. Hip, hip ...

Anfield is not quite the happy place that it should be this morning. Safe passage in the Cup Winners Cup now looks a formality after the win in Finland, but it was not a convincing performance. Most worrying is the continued inability of Fowler and Collymore to deliver. Roy. Evans, the manager, is clearly worried. If the pair really have lost the plot, then expect Villa to come sniffing for Collymore, and Villa to come studing for Liverpool to renew interest in Heskey, of DM

MANCHESTER UNITED Turin United's performance in Turin did not impress all the critics. but Alex Ferguson, the manag-er, was decidedly upbeat yesterday. "If we were playing Juventus again tomorrow, it wouldn't be a problem," he said. With Cole and Keane, and perhaps Nadal, the team that Ferguson is planning for next Wednesday's reserve match against Tranmere would beat most of the Premier-

visitors, Nottingham Forest, who were the last side to win at Old Trafford.

MIDDLESBROUGH Mikkel Beck scored twice for Middlesbrough's reserves this week, but the Denmark for-ward signed from FC Cologne insists that he is not fit enough for firstteam contention. Bryan Robson, the manager, was a guest of Juventus on Wednesday night when Manchester United lost in Turin. Robson makes frequent forays to Italy, studying training methods and fitness programmes — which seems to be paying off. Pearson, his captain, is injured for today's game.

WEST HAM UNITED

knapp, having made Bilic a "fantastic" offer to stay, seems resigned to losing his Croatia centre half. There is nothing more we can do," Redknapp said yesterday. "If he doesn't accept it, he will have to put it [a transfer request) in writing." But there will be few

tears from the West Ham manager: "There have been better players than him here before and there will be in the future." KP

NEWCASTLE UNITED A dilemma for Kevin Keegan.

His "famous five" formation worked a treat against the parts timers of Halmstads, but it might not prove to be quite so effective against Blackburn's hard-bitten Hendry and Co. "Don't expect us to use it too often in the Premiership," he said. So who will step down? It is likely to be Asprilla, awesome for 60 minutes in midweek, but awful for the last 30. "I asked him what happened, but he just said the game was won - that's Tino," Keegan mused.

NOTTINGHAM FOREST

The freak accident that put Steve Stone out of the game for a year has cast a dark shadow over the City Ground. The england midfield player underwent sur-gery to reconstruct his patella tendon on Monday as get well messages arrived by the score at the offices of the local newspaper. Frank Clark, the manager, on the eve of today's visit to Old Trafford, stressed that the club could not afford a period of selfpity. Nor, more pertinently, can they afford to buy a replacement.

SOUTHAMPTON

A shortage of goals took Graeme Souness, the manager, to Thursday's Kaiserslautern Red Star Belgrade game in search of strikers. "I'm quite happy with the way we are playing," he said. "With a little luck those defeats could have been draws." Monkou returns and Le Tissier should have recovered from his harnstring problem, but Jason Dodd misses today's game with Tottenham, which Dell faithfuls consider their best chance so far for a win. for Manchester traditions. The long-awaited Bridgewater Hall opened on Wednesday night, providing the Halle Orchestra with a spanking new venue. Manchester City merely took a spanking. Two weeks after Alan Ball left Maine Road with everybody's blessing, they are no nearer appointing his successor.

Down the years. City have supplied plenty of laughs to a grateful nation, and it does the heart good to see this glorious comedy developing a new storyline. Proper Mancunians, who know that City are the true club of Manchester, do not mind joining in. We look down our noses at the flyby-nights and out-of-towners who flock to watch the other lot. Goodness gracious, they do not even play in the city. The world is waiting to see what kind of man City will appoint this time. Since winning the old League Cup in 1976 under Tony Book, who seems to have been there longer than the Romanovs ruled Russia, they have engaged every kind of manager, bobbing between the divisions like a stricken clipper on the high seas. Bitter-sweet reunion for old boys

By David Maddock

GARY McALLISTER and Gordon Strachan, the brain and lungs of the Leeds United side that won the champion-ship under Howard Wilkinson, face their former club today with genuine regret that their long-term mentor will not be in opposition.

McAllister and Strachan. now respectively captain and assistant manager at Coventry City, provide the opposition for George Graham's first match in charge of Leeds. "I had a lot of highs with Leeds," McAllister said. "It was a big part of my life, the club where I made my name and won trophies. I was a champion there and we went to Wembley, so it will always be part of me. I was there for six years and the club still means so much to me, so I hope the changes they have made are good ones."

In particular, the Scotland captain is concerned with the way that Wilkinson was treated towards the end of his reign. "I'm sad for Howard, ! know he has been criticised for some of his decisions in the ast, but the players simply haven't done it for him; they have let him down," he said. The appointent of George Graham as manager was the best known secret at Leeds, even before my transfer. As soon as the Caspian group took over, he was linked with the job, so it came as no surprise to me when it happened. Howard spent money on the right sort of players, but then they got rid of him. It is strange he has been given the money, and then sacked so quickly."

Nadal on verge of signing for United

MANCHESTER United expect to sign Miguel Angel Nadal, the Spain defender, for about £2.4 million from Barceiona early next week. After watching United's game in Turin on Wednesday, Nadal had talks with Barcelona yesterday and is expected to arrive in Manchester to complete negotiations at the beginning of the week.

"We are getting closer and he should be here on Tuesday, possibly even Monday," Alex Ferguson, the United manag-er, said. "We agreed a fee with Barcelona two or three weeks ago and, providing that figure hasn't changed, I think we'll

Ray Harford, despite his air of cheerful indifference, has every right to be a worried man. One point from five FA Carling Premiership matches and who happens along next? Alan Shearer and Newcastle United, his new club.

It is enough to have Harford, the Blackburn Rovers manager, jerking instinctively for the P45. The irony is not lost on him. Rusedski's flaws are all in the mind

BY ALIX RAMSAY

IN OFFICES all over the country, workers suffer from that Friday feeling. Concentrating on the job in hand regardless of the financial rewards — becomes increasingly difficult as the weekend approaches. Tennis players are no different, especially at the Bournemouth International, where Greg Rusedski and Sergi Bruguera threw away winning leads to lose their quarter-final matches yes-

The day was particularly frustrating for Rusedski. For one set, he played some of his best tennis in months, not allowing Jason Stoltenberg so much as a sniff of a chance. Serving well and volleying cleanly, it took him 28 minutes to take the first set, but only a further 24 minutes to let his mind — and his lead lost 1-6, 6-1, 6-3, he was a less

"I'm mad at myself," he said. "There is no one else out there losing these matches. just me; and it's not the tennis that's losing me the matches, it's the mental side. When I make mental errors, it's so frustrating. I just go blank and don't focus enough."

For a player who claims not to be able to concentrate on court, he certainly seems fo-cused on the problem at all other times.

Since the spring Rusedski has been working with Brian Teacher to try to sort out technical and mental weaknesses in his game, but, as yet, the lessons are having no effect. Finding time together, away from the schedule of tournaments, has not been easy. Yesterday, as Stoltenberg began to gather momentum, Rusedski's backhand never his favourite shot — let him down time and again.

Top teams steer Hill in direction of Jordan

BY OLIVER HOLT

DAMON HILL'S chances of securing a drive in one of the top four Formula One teams next season were dealt a double blow yesterday when McLaren and Benetton moved towards maintaining their existing driver line-ups in 1997. Hill now seems set to form an unlikely alliance with Ralf Schumacher, the younger brother of Michael, the world champion, at Jordan.

Benetton did not make a formal comment about their decision to persevere with Jean Alesi and Gerhard Berger next season, but it is believed that they reached a final decision to honour their drivers' two-year contracts yesterday, ending attempts to squeeze Hill, who leads the world championship by 13 points with two races to go, into the team instead of Alesi, the erratic Frenchman.

McLaren, though, trumpeted the fact that they had decided to hold on to Mika Hakkinen, the Finn, as a partner for David Coulthard next year. Ron Dennis, the McLaren managing director, showed a keen interest in Hill before it was announced that he would be dropped by Williams at the end of the year, but yesterday he said that "an extensive and detailed evaluation" had settled on Hakkinen. "I have always felt that Mika has the talent and commitment to be a world champion," Dennis said.

The decision makes it almost certain that Ralf Schumacher, who has tested a McLaren twice this year but is unwilling to be a test driver. will move to Jordan. His recruitment could be announced at a press conference by Benson and Hedges, the team's sponsor, next Friday in Estoril, two days before the Portuguese Grand Prix.

Jordan are also believed to have opened talks with Hill about 1997. With Ferrari committed to Michael Schumacher and Eddie Irvine, and Williams to Jacques Ville-neuve and Heinz-Harald Frentzen, the Irish team is Pootwork and Stewart Grand

Switch puts Morgan in the frame

FROM PHIL YATES

BRIAN MORGAN, whose confidence plummeted to rock bottom last season, maintained his unexpectedly successful start to the new campaign by reaching the semi-finals of the Asian Classic here yesterday. Morgan, the world No 49. entered uncharted territory in a ranking event when he recovered from a 4-2 deficit to defeat Tony Drago, of Malta, 4. When he meets Ken Doherty today, Morgan will be attempting to extend his run of six wins in the tourna-ment, during which he has eliminated Stephen Hendry and Jimmy White.

Such a performance represents a remarkable transformation in fortunes for the 1987 world junior champion, who lost 12 consecutive matches last season, largely as a result of becoming preoccupied with the importance of defence. "Over the past couple of years I've become more and more negative," Morgan. a professional since 1989, said It's so easy to get bogged down, but, after last season, l realised changes had to be made. However, the knowledge that he had lost on all eight of his previous appearances in the quarter-finals of a world ranking event began to cloud his thoughts.

Drago scored only two points in the next two frames and Morgan, who had caught up to 4-4 with solid runs of 52, 73 and 46, added the ninth almost as convincingly.

The week had begun badly enough with that 3-2 loss at home to Borussia Mönchengladbach in the Uefa Cup and the probable elimination from a tournament into which they had scraped on the final day of last season.

The game on Tuesday was lost not so much by the withdrawal of the injured Dennis Bergkamp as by horrific errors in a porous defence. CHESTER-LE-STREET (second day of four): Leicester-shire (24pts) beat Durham (2) by an innings and 251 runs

NEXT Thursday, on a dowdy ground in a city that could hardly care less about cricket, Leicestershire will expect to win the county championship for the first time since 1975. and for only the second time in their history. This overwhelm ing victory, completed inside two days, has put them within inches of the summit. If they beat Middlesex at Grace

Road, they can plant the pole. It is not difficult to know what it will mean to the people of Leicester: zilch. The civic indifference to cricket was underlined by the decision of the city's evening paper not to cover this game, reckoning no doubt correctly - that it was never going to knock rugby and football off the back page. Whitaker joked that there might be "50 or 60" people to welcome them home next week. Hello Leicester, is there anybody out there?

It will take a mighty effort by one of the teams behind them to scare off Leicestershire now. They bowled out Durham for 139 shortly before 6.00 last night to achieve a win by the little matter of an innings and 251 runs. It was the heaviest defeat in Durham's five-year championship history and, if they fail to beat Derbyshire next week, they will have gone through the season without a single victory. Leicestershire have only to hold their nerve to finish too. and, though Middlesex will not roll over, as Durham did here, they will have to play uncommonly well to deny a side that has emerged as so much more than the sum of its parts. True to the workaday style of the side, their key performer yesterday was

Wells, the journeyman allrounder, who has contributed more fully with bat and ball this season than he could ever have dared dream.

Wobbling the ball around at a gentle medium pace, much as Simmons did on the first day, Wells ripped out three of the first four wickets after Whitaker declared Leicestershire's innings on 516 for six, a lead of 390. Simmons and Nixon shared 284 of those runs to establish a record sixth-wicket stand for the county, exceeding the 262 that Sharpe and Fowke made against Derbyshire in 1911. By the time that Simmons became Campbell's first firstclass victim, he had made 171 from 170 balls, striking 23 fours and two sixes with the ease of a man who has nothing to fear from the bowlers. Once again Durham's cricket was absolutely shameful as Simmons and Nixon milked 199 runs from the morning session.

Nixon reached a hundred of his own from 168 balls and, by the time the pair were parted, Whitaker knew that he had enough runs to win two matches against Durham, and unleashed his bowlers on a demoralised team. Comically, Campbell fell to the second ball of the innings, waving his bat at Millns to give Nixon the first of four catches.

When Wells was brough on, he was successful in his first over and picked up cheap wickets in the next two. Morris was the third man, caught capably "on the drive" by Milins at short extra cover. Morris made a sorry sight as he trudged off, silently and beyond consolation. He has made only 405 runs in the championship this year at an average of 15 and, midway through a six-year contract huge by cricketing standards. he and Durham must wish he had never left Derby.

Roseberry, another gifted strokeplayer who has found the transition to these uneven tches troubling, was left in a helpless situation. After he gloved a pull to Nixon, to give Mullally his first wicket, the left-armer mopped up the tail with four of the last five, three of them clean bowled, and Leicestershire had no need to claim the extra half-hour.

Whitaker praised his team for their "clinical" cricket and it was certainly that. Cynical, too: Mulially booted the ball away after taking the last wicket and did nothing to dispel the impression that he is an unattractive chap. If Leicestershire do end the season as champions, is it possible for him to behave as a champion should?

☐ Northamptonshire edged to a first-innings lead over Lancashire at Northampton, thanks to a fluent 90 by Mel Loye, an unbeaten 85 by Kevin Curran and five successive half-century partnerships. Their impressive batting display took them to 357 for five in reply to Lancashire's 356.

Players give the rugby clubs more control

By David Hands RUGBY CORRESPONDENT

THE bitter dispute between the Rugby Football Union (RFU) and the leading English dubs entered what may prove to be its final phase vesterday. An accord has been reached between the English Professional Rugby Union Clubs (Eprue) and the national squad which, taken to its logical conclusion, would deprive England of their best players for the foreseeable

The players' representatives met Epruc in London and, in effect, granted their club employers the right to deal with the RFU over their international careers. In doing so, they hope to resolve the dispute, one way or another, even at the possible cost of losing contracts with the RFU worth up to £70,000 for the eight-match international programme over the next ten months. "We would be happy to release the players for training on Wednesday, or to play for England, on a friendlyindependence basis," Donald Kerr, the Epruc chairman, said, "but this is the final chapter. We feel this must be settled so that we can all move forward."

The clubs take the view that they must make a stand now, for the sake of professional rugby's future, and the players have agreed with them. The clubs have set October Il as their departure date from the RFU, whether by common consent or not.

the party for describing the League leader as a "destructive demagogue" who had single-handedly adopted a policy of secession for "Padania", the League's term for northern Italy, without consulting the rank and file. She said that most League members supported her in favouring a "less extreme" policy of local autonomy within a

Signor Bossi used a Murano glass container yesterday to collect water from an icy mountain stream at Pian del Re, the source of the Po, 6,500ft above sea level in the spectacular western Alps near Turin. The event is commemorated by the words "Padania-Po" and the date, carved on a small black granite slab nearby.

Later he attended a rally and fireworks display in Turin. He is taking the water and a handful of soil by helicopter, boat and catamaran to Venice — the proposed "capital" of Padania — where he will declare Padanian independence tomorrow.

and praising Italian unity. An opinion survey in Milan, published in La Repubblica, said that only 3.6 per cent supported secession, a drop from 6 per cent in July. Signora Pivetti said she learnt of her expulsion from the television news. She said the march along the Po had become a "circus". Secession was Signor Bossi's per-sonal view and had never been sanctioned by the party. "I cannot take this march seriously," she said. "This mystical worship of the God Po is offensive to me as a

There was also dissent within the League over a call by Roberto Calderoli, secretary of the League in Lombardy, for teachers from southern Italy to be excluded from northern Italians schools to make way for "real Padanians". He said he was not a racist, but schools and the civil service had been "colonised by southerners".

The League gained a third of the vote in its northern strongholds in April's general election, but has no popular mandate for "indepen-dence". Romano Prodi, the Prime Minister, said that the Government would not allow Italy "to go down the path of Czechoslovakia, let alone Yugoslavia", and pledged further investment in the South.

Signor Bossi said that there would be a "fully independent" Padania within a year, with its own parliament, currency, identity cards and militia. An embryo mil-stewards, who all wear green shirts, Corriere della Sera said Signor Bossi's activities amounted to "a treasonable coup d'état".

Many anti-Bossi protests are planned for today, including a rally in Verona by the right-wing opposition Forza Italia, led by Sil-vio Berlusconi, the former Prime Minister, and one by the post-Fascist Alleanza Nazionale in Milan. Gianfranco Fini, its leader, said more people would turn out for his rally than for Signor Bossi's.

Richter's career has not been flourishing since.

The most symbolic piece of legislation to go through yes-terday was the sick-pay reform. Until the amenda were passed yesterday, ill German workers were allowed six weeks off with 100 per cent pay. But compensa-tion was based on the pay, overtime and bonuses received in the period before the sick-leave.

In many cases, workers could thus earn more by being ill than by turning up for work. Opel, the car manufacturer, for example, estimated that it paid about 120 per cent of basic pay to workers on sick-leave. The situation has become so critical that some companies engage private detectives to check on those registered as ill.

The Chancellor's amendments, which will now come into effect on October 1, aim to cut sick payment to 80 per cent of full pay. That should save companies hundreds of millions of marks a year - but it hits at one of the central pillars of the German welfare state, and has the trade unions up in arms. The strategic point is to ensure that Germany remains competitive with other Western countries, and to ensure a continual flow of inward investment. American companies in particular are becoming nervous about setting up factories in Germany where workers are so compre-

EU schism worries Redwood

FROM GEORGE BROCK IN AMSTERDAM

EU federalists who encourage regional devolution against governments are playing with fire, John Redwood told a German and Dutch audience at the University of Amsterdam yesterday.

Referring to demonstrations in northern Italy this week-end, Mr Redwood said that EU governments and officials were making an alliance of convenience with regional separatists in the hope that splitting nation states would help in the creation of a federal Europe.

"I would advise them not to play with the fire of regional devolution against national authorities," he said. "Unthinking support for regional movements will tear states apart and help to create political parties which are hardly likely to want to submit to the rule of a bigger, European federal state."

SUCH a question would have been unthinkable of any previous They call his refusal to release ous President, but it has now been asked of Bill Clinton. Does he have venereal disease to Mike McCurry, the White House press secretary, on Thursday after Bob Dole demanded to know why Mr Clinton was refusing to release his health records. "Good God, do you really want to raise that question? That's an astonishing question," Mr McCurry retorted before offering a firm denial. American journalists covering Mr Clinton's campaign trip agonised over whether to report the ground-breaking exchange, and many did not. Mr Dole and his surrogates anything more than summaries of his regular health checks a "mystery". They joke about hearing "pretty colourful guesses" as to what the records might contain. There have been oblique allusions to the allegations of womanising and drug abuse heaped on Mr Clinton by right-wing foes.

On Thursday Mr Dole stepped up his demand. "Let's have your health records. Mr President," he declared at a rally in Kentucky, and Mr McCurry was finally forced to respond. He accused Mr Dole of manufacturing an issue because he had "nothing else left". He argued that the White House released regular sum-maries of the President's have been implying that the health, but also had a duty to all poison gas weapons within ten years and shut any facility that could be used for their manufacture.

America has been the leading force behind worldwide negotiations for the treaty, completed by former President Bush in 1992. It has been signed by 160 countries, requires only two more endorsements, and is almost certain to go into force without American participation.

Early enthusiasm for religious and political influence gives way to all-conquering march of trade

FROM DAVID WATTS IN TASHKENT

THE "Great Game" in Central Asia has resumed with a new cast of characters lusting after the region's real and imaginary riches.

When British spies such as Captain Arthur Conolly and Colonel Charles Stoddart roamed the high steppes in the service of the British Empire. they had only the Russians to contend with. Today the spies are back, along with merchant adventurers and exporters of religion and revolution who are taking on all-comers.

There are vast oil and gas reserves to be exploited, not to mention the potential markets that are thriving now they are free of the economic slavery that came with Soviet power. Convily and Stoddart came to a sticky end when they were beheaded at the behest of the Emir of Bokhara. Today's pundits face no such danger. but the economic conse-quences of failure could be

Even allowing for crude Soviet-style standards of measurement, the quantities of gas and billions of barrels of oil that lie to the east of the Caspian Sea may dwarf the resources of the Middle East, with gold, coal, silver and copper adding to the heady mix. In the future, these energy reserves could be essential to maintaining world supplies with countries such as China swallowing quantities to make a conservationist blench.

But one thing has not changed since the days of the first Great Game - the difficulty of getting all those riches out. Tamerlane left India with with gold and jewels. Today the difficulty is in circumvent-ing Mother Russia, who still feels that the area is her backyard. Pipes carrying gas under the Caspian Sea and in the opposite direction to the Chinese coast, costing anything up to £25 billion, are two of the latest brainwaves.

The nations neighbouring the region have been in the vanguard wooing Kazakh-stan, Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan, Kirghizia and Tajikistan. Turkey and Iran have quickly sought influence in the region. With Turkic and Persian-related languages widely spoken and the common bond of Islam linking all the countries as well as widespread ethnic links, a "united nations of Central Asia" seemed to be in the making.

Victorian spies Colonel Stoddart and Captain Conolly, right, are led in chains to the Emir of Bokhara's dungeon

Turkish diplomat said. The Turks quickly opened embassies and launched a communications satellite so that Turkish television could be Turks' plans had more than a whiff of empire. The Turks. and others, were soon to discover that Central Asian countries, having just dis-pensed with one big brother, were in no hurry to find another. Also, the Turks were far too democratic for the likes of Uzbekistan's President Karimov and he resented their harbouring of Uzbek dissidents. He prefers the Chinese model of economic gain without too much political pain.

Just as the Turks are now willing to admit that they made mistakes in wooing Central Asia — few people can understand their television broadcasts and some of the educational links look suspiciously like some of the old Soviet ploys — so the initial Iranian drive for religious influence has been replaced by a more pragmatic interest in trade and the establishment of rail links and warm-water port outlets.

The most visible countries, sending prime ministers, royalty and secretaries of defence have been the least effective," a senior Japanese diplomat said in Tashkent, Indeed, the ubiquitous South Korean cars are evidence of Seoul's success. and Tokyo has put relations in the hands of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry rather than the Foreign

The Government used to maintain a digital population clock at a busy intersection in Delhi. which clicked over so fast the figures were a blur. The clock constantly blew its circuits. China's population reached 2 billion at the end of last year and could rise to 1.3 billion by the end of the century if families defy the one-child family planning policy.

Mr Hauser, speaking of the North Korean crisis, said: "If you go into the countryside you see only skinny people. Many children have pot-bellies, stick-like arms, visible ribs — symptoms of malnutrition. This year they may just make it, but next year the crisis will be worse.

Floods in July destroyed 10 per cent of crops, aggravating the food shortage after last year's severe inundation, the worst this century.

Despite a plea for international help, little more than oken aid had arrived lysts say Stalinist North Korea has only itself to blame. No journalists are permitted to view the devastation caused by the floods in the securitysealed state and no pictures appear of hungry children the kind of photographs that, in Ethiopia for example, evoked worldwide concern. In recent years North Korea has been able to produce only 3.5 million tonnes of grains, well below the 4.8 million tonnes required to meet minimum nutritional needs, the UN estimates.

FROM TUNKU VARADARAJAN IN MADRID

SPANISH "football widows" are striking back. Weary of being scorned in favour of televised soccer by their couch-potato husbands and boyfriends, a group of purposeful señoras have formed a national "Association of Women Abandoned for Football".

Their objectives are to reclaim household television sets, and bring those daft men back to their senses.

Football mania is relentless in Spain this month. As a result of a patchwork of deals concluded recently between clubs and television channels. a match is now broadcast live every night of the week except Friday. This expanded coverage, which enslaves most men to the set between 8pm and 10pm, is believed to be worth 220,000 million pesetas (more than £1 billion) to the football clubs over a seven-year period. Naturally, marital discord is reaching dizzy heights, with husbands less inclined to be uxorious while the season is in progress. Cases have been recorded of men beating spouses for switching channels or for objecting to the raucous presence at home of "a few mates". As a result, the "abandoned women's" association, founded by Madrid bar-owner Margarita Peces, has decided to members meet at her bar on match nights to discuss strategy. "We will soon see who abandons whom," Señora Peces threatens darkly.

Inspired by their example, women are beginning to be more assertive. A Madrid cleaner, Margarita, 57, said: "At my age there's no point in threatening to kick my hus-band out of bed. But I have refused to make him fried peppers and Spanish omelette for dinner, things he likes to eat in front of the set." Other women have gone on ironing and shopping strikes, or have defiantly sold the family set while their husbands are at work. Several have stopped cooking until a second television is bought.

The Restaurant Federation of Spain is also complaining.
"We could lose up to a third of our takings this year because of football," said a spokesman, adding: "We will have to lay off waiters and cooks soon."

Bar owners have issued a warning that they will boycott the products of companies that advertise on television during football matches. Agustin Vidaurreta, a Barcelona barman, said: "There are a few beers that we have stopped stocking already. We have to fight this football madness any way we can."

an there be any concept that divides the arts world so comprehensively as that fread word "authenticity"? I don't mean divide in the sense that everybody argues about it all the time. I mean that the question of authenticity - of whether the punter is being offered the genuine article or a fake — matters hugely in some cultural spheres, and not a whit in others. Very confusing, but very revealing too. Let's recall what might be called the "authentic sensitive" areas. First, there is the visual-art market, which is based on the illogical but unshakeable premise that a genuine Old Master should be vorth millions more than an imitation, no matter how superb the latter's quality. What's more, there is a quite separate (and deliciously vicious) debate in the museum world at present about how much an old painting should be "restored" to its supposedly original colours, or how legitimate it is to "mend" broken fragments of

It's the real thing, but who cares? of authenticity is paramount nearly all the time. If you doubt that, try pickling your own dead sheep and see if a Cork Street art dealer offers you the sort of price that Damien Hirst gets for his. In the art business, as in high fashion, it's the label that counts.

Much the same questions of authenticity were faced in the music world 20 years ago. Indeed, when the first recordings emerged of Bach and Handel played in painstakingly revived 18th-century ably wrote of "scraping off the varnish" from the music. Unsympathetic critics, of course, com-plained that it was the emotion which was being scraped off.

But the authenticity lobby carried the day. Today you rarely

So in the visual arts the question instruments, and they have continued their advance into the 19thcentury repertoire. The composer's law: banished forever are the wilful "improvements" of earlier generations. It's been a revolution, and often a revelation. Far from restricting emotion, period-instrument ensembles have set new standards in virtuosity and pathos.

> of the arts regard the idea of authenticity as laughable? I refer to what hapr ns in our theatres. This autumn the Royal Opera is staging Wagner's Ring. It will be a bizarre and incongruous occasion. In the pit, the great conductor Bernard Haitink will strain every sinew to capture faithfully Wag ner's late-Romantic sound-world. But on stage will be a production that bears about as much relation to Wagner's detailed stage instructions as I do to Zorba the Greek. The Royal Opera is only tamely following the pattern around the world. You could go to the opera every night for a year, in a dozen countries, and never once see

Mozart, Verdi or Wagner staged as the composer might have

It is claimed that such selfimportant "concept" stagings bring in new, younger audiences by making the operas "relevant". The reverse is true. "Designer opera" is so stuffed full of in-jokes and nudge-nudge post-modernism that it alienates first-timers. That's why many people (including top conductors) now prefer opera in concert rather than on stage. At least punters can enjoy the tunes without wondering whether Mimi is about to overdose on heroin.

In the spoken theatre, too, the same process has happened. Surely the point of scrupulously recreating Shakespeare's Globe was to take us nearer to the performing tradition that em-braced Shakespeare. Alas, such a notion appears risible to those running the Globe. And to many drama critics as well.

The general feeling is that any attempted authentic staging is bound to be artificial and twee: exactly the same argument that was advanced, and utterly routed, in the music world two decades ago. Instead, we will probably see the same diet of spurious Shakespeare updatings at the Globe as everywhere else. A unique opportunity will be squandered.

am not pleading that every Shakespeare production casts boys in the women's roles, or that every Wagner staging presents enormous ladies in Viking helmets. I just wish that, now and then, somebody had the boldness to show us how stage gesture, speech cadences and cos-tumes would have worked in the author's day. After all, the scholarship already exists: it's gatherin,

Unfortunately, ambitious young directors realise that they can make headlines by beating up the classics. And many older directors regard the author's text merely as vehicles for their own majestic egos. Perhaps they also think that if the same old repertoire is constantly being "reinvented" by eye-popping stagings, this will cover up the sad truth that there are so few new plays or operas that the public will pay to see.

But classics are classics; they need no help from New Luvvies or the Block. Present the texts with a proper sense of style, and audiences will find revelations for themselves. Otherwise posterity will look back on the late 20th century and say: "Ah yes, those were the people who dared to muck around with the masterbecause they didn't have the wit to devise masterpieces of their own." male bastion of heavy metal. Live shows are undeniably Skunk Anansie's forte. Where as their thrashing guitars and Skin's shrill vocals can sometimes sound jarringly one-dimensional on record, they made perfect sense booming across the packed hall of the Astoria.

The most rapturously received tasters from their forthcoming second album, Stoosh. were those combining simple melodic structures with compelling terrace-chant hooklines, such as the current

BBC PROMS: Chicago shines

Big sound of the city

LAST but emphatically not least of the major orchestras to visit the Proms this season was the Chicago Symphony, which on Thursday gave superlatively fine perfor-mances of Schoenberg and Bruckner under its music director, Daniel Barenboim. Both composers benefit from the band's well-upholstered sound and the technical brilliance of its players.

Barenboirn and the or-chestra made bold, mesmerising statements in Schoenberg's early atonal masterwork, Five Pieces for Orchestra. The nervous energy of the opening Premonitions came across, but a refined string section underlined its lyricism, too. In conjuring up the Past that followed, every note was made to tell, but all were joined in long-breathed, flowing lines. Barenboim was at his eloquent best in the hypnotically shifting. slow third piece.

The orchestra's splendid brass players got their first chance to shine in the ex-ploding fanfares of the fourth piece, and all combined in a tightly logical performance of the final contrapuntal fantasy.

In Bruckner's

Chicago SO/ Barenboim Albert Hall/Radio 3

Symphony, Barenboim showed that he is now as strong dealing with long symphonic spans as he has always been on dramatic incident, and he took an expansive but never slack view of the opening movement, while still pointing up seldom-heard details.

At every turn in Bruck-ner's massive symphony. there was playing to savour: most memorably, the serene cello theme of the Adagio, at once radiant and mournful, the incandescent strings at the close of that movement, and the sonorous brass that launched the finale so powerfully. But it was what Barenboim did with the sounds that mattered. He shaded the Adagio with subtlety, gradually gathering the music up in its steady progress towards a summit that was searingly intense. and the solemn finale had true Brucknerian spirit-

OPERA

ENO finds an appealing Violetta in Rosa Mannion, but that's not enough to save its new La traviata

■ GOING OUT

From Er.vin Blumenfeld's gorgeous pictures of the grand and glamorous at the Barbican...

to Stewart Parker's remarkable play Pentecost at the Donmar, all the top events are in Weekend, page 14

■ MONDAY

OPERA: Rodney Milnes finds ENO's brilliant Violetta let down by wrong-headed musical direction

ly about English National Opera's new Traviata in the context of a musical performance so mannered, dreary and plain rong-headed, but here goes. At least the essential ingredient for any staging is safely in place: a quite remarkable Violetta. Purely physically, Rosa Mannion might have been born to portray this doomed consumptive. She is tiny and looks fragile, vulnerable, hugely appealing. The director Jonathan Miller takes grateful advantage of this in his Medically Correct reading: breathlessness rather than mere stage-coughing in the first act, and a bedridden last act i... which she has not even the strength to sit up unaided when Alfredo returns.

I know she has to sing as well, but how deverly Mannion suggests breathless-ness through Verdi's phrasing in "Gran Dio! morir si giovane". This Violenta's unsparingly realistic death spasms are almost too painful

And Mannion's voice is as appealing as her presence, essentially soft-grained and sweet but with real strength and body in the middle-toupper reaches. She shapes the lines with inborn eloquence and understanding: her account of "Addio del passato" (both verses, hooray) went straight to the heart, both of Verdi's music and that of the audience. Ideally one wants a little more edge to the tone for the hysteria of the first act, and she could make more of the words of Edmund Tracey's faithful, tactfully revised translation, but this was her first Violetta, already a sterling achievement, and she will get better and better.

Miller's production is simplicity itself, in a plain box set by Bernard Culshaw minimally adapted to suggest four locations, and period costumes by Clare Mitchell that look really lived-in, without a whiff of Gainsborough Pictures daintiness. The society against which the drama is played out is of stultifying bourgeois respectability, but do the party scenes suggest strongly enough the corruption the empty-headedness beneath the surface?

But Miller and the Ameri-

ertson — making his house debut — get Father Germont absolutely right: not a villain, just a stuffy, thoughtless old man who thinks he is doing the right thing. His son Alfredo is also a bit of a stick, but John Hudson sings the role beautifully, with long, unbroken lines warmly moulded. Baron (Ashley Holland), Doctor (Andrew Greenan). Marquis (Roberto Salvatori) are neatly sketched in. It is a production that leaves everything to the music. Alas, the music simply is not there and I am not just referring to the cuts and omissions in a lazy version of the text very much out of joint with the spirit of the times. Nowadays we tend to pay Verdi the compliment of performing what he wrote, and once you start tinkering with so carefully crafted a score, the whole dramatic structure starts to wobble.

Not that there was much drama of any kind in Steven Mercurio's reading. It is not thought it perfectly horrible.

just that most of his tempos were leadenly slow; he indulged in sentimental ritardandos towards the end of almost every musical para-graph and the music limped disastrously. He also applied "art" to Verdi's big-boned lines. little tenutos and catches of musical breath, and the effect was insufferably twee: not even the Admiralty, as one of those Hermiones once said, could be so arch. The overall musical picture was softedged, precious and sentimental, not adjectives normally associated with Verdi.

ARRESTING in itself, this tall (187cm) clay figure once formed part of a terracotta army of 6,000 soldiers made for the mausoleum of the First Emperor in the 3rd century BC. Their discovery in 1974 caused a sensation.

This soldier was originally painted in brilliant colours but the lacquer has decayed and we have to imagine the splendour of his freshly applied yellow or ochre garment. Since he was a footsoldier in the vanguard of the principal troop, his hand probably held a hilted sword.

Resolute rather than ferocious, he seems proud to have been chosen to make sure that his Emperor comes to no harm on his journey to the other world.

 Mysteries of Ancient China, sponsored by The Times. continues at the British Museum to Jan 5. Admission E5: bookings on 0171-420 0000

THE SUNDAY TIMES IS THE SUNDAY PAPERS

Gaitskell, Blair and the party

Brian Brivati recalls Labour's lost leader and his modernising legacy

n Sunday, October II, 1959. Reynolds News carried an article by Ivan Yates calling for the Labour Party to break its links with the trade unions. The then leader of the party, Hugh Gaitskell, dismissed the talk as nonsense: the link with the unions, which were then mostly on the Right of the party and had helped to make him leader, was safe.

If yesterday's reports are correct and Tony Blair is planning to take the next logical step in his modernising of Labour, then he is also contemplating a leap in the dark. If the historic Labour Party ended when Clause Four was replaced, then a new political entity would be born if the unions and the party cut their links. Hitherto. Mr Blair's political adventure has not been without precedent. He is following in the footsteps of a public school and Oxford-educated economist who entered the Commons more than 50 years ago and died in 1963: Hugh Gaitskell.

Unlike Mr Blair, Gaitskell was happy to call himself a democratic socialist. He did not see himself as a social democrat, believing that the State should use planning. demand management, progressive taxation and public ownership to promote greater equality. He also believed that the British were unique and the Cold War worth fighting. His patriotism led him to oppose both unilateral nuclear disarmament and the terms negotiated by Harold Macmillan for British membership of the EEC.

Gaitskell believed that winning power mattered. He wanted Labour to be electable and his revisionism the 1950s equivalent of today's modernisation - was designed to enhance Labour's electoral chances. He helieved Labour was

Gaitskell: patriot better equipped to run which the the mixed economy wartime coalition and the Attlee Government had created, and he had little faith in markets. Democratic socialism was setting the political agenda and the Conservatives were the ones on the defensive. Labour, although riddled with internal conflicts that make Mr. Blair's disciplinary problems look ! like a tea dance, had a common

Gaitskell was wedded to the Labour Party by deep intellectual and emotional ties, which is why his response to the loss of the 1959 election was to propose the replacement of Clause Four, the statement of the party's aims and values. He wanted to supplant the promise to extend public ownership with a coherent and extensive commitment to equality and personal freedom — and he failed. But his position was clear: if you modernise, you need to bring the basic ideology of the party with you. Labour must grow but it must also remain connected with its core beliefs. There are significant questions here for new Labour. Where is the ideological framework against which the initial decisions of Blair's ministers can be tested and from which they can derive the necessary strength to override Whitehall's agenda and begin to set their own? Gaitskell believed that Britain mattered. His patriotism had two foundations: the Commonwealth. which involved Britain in a global role of political leadership, and the special relationship with the United States, which meant that Britain had to play its full part in the Cold War. He was then the only major figure in the Labour Party to denounce the Communist governments as comparable in their barbarity to Nazi Germany. For this, and for his opposition to unilateralism, he has suffered the lasting hatred of many on the Left.

His character combined romanticism, expressed in his views of Britain's global role, and ruthlessness, shown most clearly when he united the party behind his opposition to the EEC, isolating his friends. His unashamed evocation of Britain's past, in his last great speech to a Labour Party conference, is a reminder that the Tories do not have a monopoly of patriotism. Gaitskell's brand of national self-confidence, which should not be confused with the crude xenophobia of today's Euro-sceptics, is something new Labour should take Gaitskell believed that socialism was spreading opportunity and wealth more fairly and ensuring that people enjoyed basic material standards and opportunities which gave meaning to freedom. His egalitarianism extended to race: while he was leader, Labour opposed immigration controls. It also embraced the "permissive society". His basic beliefs centred on reason rather than religion. He had little time for Christian socialism or social conservatism - in marked contrast to Mr Blair.

He was an old-fashioned Englishman, his emotional, passionate and humorous personality trapped behind the public face of the uptight Wykehamist. His usual speaking style was dry, didactic and donnish. Being summoned to the leader's room was likened to going to see the headmaster. Occasionally. though, the private man broke the public image. Each time the mask of the English public schoolboy slipped, Gaitskell scored an immense triumph. In 1947 he broke down at a miners' gala and shed tears of gratitude for the NUM - endearing him forever to the miners' leader Sam Watson. In 1960

he turned on his tormentors at the Scarborough conference and scattered them with one of the most emotionally charged speeches of the postwar era. In 1962, all the conflicts and contradictions of his upper-middle-class family of Imperial civil servants flooded out as he rejected the EEC at Brighton. The passion he showed on these occasions was dismissed by his enemies as demagogy, but his friends saw the courage and honesty.

These public glimpses highlight the tensions of his private life. Circumscribed politically by the conservatism of his party, he relaxed and indulged his passions in private. He loved dancing, good food and wine, and while men often found him reserved, women did not. In the most gruelling years of his political career, he found escape with Ann Fleming, wife of the James Bond creator lan, and a high-society world far removed from the party which he loved. It was a sign of the personal cost of his path to power.

Gaitskell's career came to a head at Brighton in 1962. He united the party with controlled passion. One hundred and eight days later he was dead: struck down by a rare and poorly understood disease. His legacy, which the Labour Party has now embraced, was the importance of the pursuit of power. His contemporary relevance lies in the limits he set to the compromises which democratic socialists should make to win power, and the clear set of beliefs, centred on equality. that should inform the actions of a Labour government. The question his life poses to the modern Labour Party is stark: how many principles is power worth?

Dr Brivati's biography of Gaitskell will be published on Monday by Richard Cohen Books.

Is public speaking a declining art? Peter Riddell compares the eloquence of past and present

nyone going to this autumn's party conferences expecting great oratory is likely to be disappointed. Partisan bombast and laboured soundbites there will be aplenty, but little which lingers in the memory to inspire, persuade or excite. It is the same in Parliament. Few MPs can now produce a rush by other Members into the chamber, or by journalists into the Press Gallery.

That can be viewed just as middle-aged nostalgia. As my colleague Brian MacArthur argues in The Penguin Book of Twentieth-Century Speeches. "Oratory is always a declining art. Every generation judges contemporary speakers unfavourably against the giants of the past." In 1914, there were complaints that oratory had given way to talk and the same was said after the arrival of radio, the rinema and television. The style of oratory has been changed by this communications revolution. Nearly a third of the electorate went to public meetings in the early 1950s: fewer than 3 per cent do now. The length of speeches has shortened from the regular two or three hours of Gladstone to the 75 minutes or less of recent compressed Budgets Oratory is not dead: political leaders still need to rouse their followers if they are to succeed. My doubt is whether standards have declined - as is suggested by a new collection of archive recordings, Great Political Speeches. This complements a Great Parliamentary Speeches, produced last year and also compiled by Peter Hill, a veteran BBC correspondent. The two hours reverberate with the sounds of British politics, starting with a still powerful but high-pitched Gladstone in 1889. The giants are all there — Asquith, Lloyd George, Baldwin, Ramsay MacDonald, Churchill, Bevan, Macmillan and Gaitskell, I would quibble at the omission of Balfour, F.E. Smith and Mosley and at the inclusion of some run-of-the-mill modern contributions (for example, a shrill Lady Olga Maitland).

The older generation were more inspiring and moving. They talked in paragraphs, not phrases, showing a feel for language and a sense of history. Nonconformity was as important as Balliol. Lloyd George acknowledged that his speeches were "founded on the oratory of the pulpits". But a change occurs from the 1960s, when television came of age. Presentation is now often staccato. Wisecracks have replaced wit. "The lady's not for turning" was invented to fill a headline space. Politicians know long speeches will not be reported, so they do not bother.

Of recent British politicians, Baroness Thatcher was never "a natural orator", as is conceded by Sir Ronald Millar, who has added tone to the speeches of Tory leaders for two decades. In his memoir A View from the Wings, he adds that "growing skill in timing and sheer authority of manner made her a huge audience seemingly without effort". The same force of will rather than style has been shown by Tony Blair, while John Major has relied more on innate decency and a conversational manner.

eggy Noonan, author of Ron-ald Reagan's most memorable phrases, argues in What I Saw at the Revolution that people "no longer learn the rhythms of public utterance from Shakespeare and the Bible. The modern egalitarian impulse has made politicians leery of flaunting high rhetoric." There has been a debasement of the political culture. The semidetached Roy Jenkins and Chris Patten are rarities in attempting historical or literary allusions. But the fault lies also with people such as Noonan herself. The rise of the speechwriter has contributed to the 🏺 decline in oratory. Speeches are often hybrids, in part because of the time-pressures on leading politi-cians. The results lack a coherent or uplifting theme. Only a skilled actor such as Reagan can convincingly deliver someone else's lines. In the past, politicians wrote most or all their speeches. A few such as Gladstone managed with minimal preparation, although Churchill spent long hours rehearsing and Lloyd George confessed he often made "many false starts".

The best orators today are veterans such as Tony Benn or Michael Heseltine, and those who learnt debating young. Malcolm Riskind and Robin Cook have been exchanging barbs since their days at Edinburgh University 30 years ago, and their speeches are very much their own work. Perhaps the clearest pointer that oratory will be kept alive well into the next century comes from the inclusion in Great Political Speeches of William Hague's precocious debut at a Tory conference in 1977 as a 16-year-old Young Conservative, sounding like a 60-year-old knight of the shires.

The latest Austen adaptation is a far cry from the book — but there is room for both fter Middlemarch comes Emma. After the epic novel of the head comes the epic novel of the heart. tossed to the ravenous wolves of film and out this week. Middlemarch survived serialisation with only flesh wounds. Previous Jane Austen adaptations were slighter works that could withstand mauling. But what is Emma's fate, torn from home and hearth and carried across the sea to Hollywood?

I confess that, man and boy, have been in love with Emma. I stood with Mr Knightley by her father's Hartfield fireside watching her scheme with the emotions of her friends. As each scheme dissolved in her hands, I scolded, but felt for her anger. Other people's love seemed so wayward. Emma might be bored, selfish, malicious, a snob, but she was never quite a fool. She took each defeat hard but returned philanthropic to the fray. to set her microcosm of the world on the path to happiness, shipshape and Emma-fashion. She grew up. When she was at last confronted with the chaotic denouement of Harriet's infatuation with Knightley. "it darted through her with the speed of an arrow that Mr Knightley must marry no one but herself". A hurricane tore up the gently nodding trees of Highbury. Knightley was after all the purger of her sins and tutor of her maturity. He found her "faultless in spite of her faults".

He adored her.

Jane Austen has always defied illustration. Dickens has his Phiz and Lewis Carroll his Tenniel. I have no picture in my mind's eye of any Austen character. Her books carry only portraits of herself. The nearest we have to a description of Emma is "handsome". The young men of Highbury are not heating a path to her door. Austen did not want Emma pretty. She was writing a geography of the emotions, a route map through the turbulence within. To give her characters flesh and blood would put this map at risk. To put them onto film would dazzle the reader with surface light and lose the shadows. The central tension in Emma is between the heroine, sublimating her marital hopes in those of her friends, and Knightley's horror at her meddling. These two individuals are 18 years apart, divided not just by age but by a generation of wisdom and moral behaviour. She is wealthy, pert, witty and immature. He is sensible rather than intellectual, constant rather than doting, not rich but "with land". Emma is often described as a marriage of converging minds. It is more one of converging maturities.

The film version is gorgeous and enjoyable. Gwyneth Paltrow's Emma is doe-eyed and full of artless menace. Her astonishing neck - Paltrows must have giraffes as ancestors - would have had all Highbury gasping. Her complexion is more Malibu than Surrey. For an American, her mastery of English accent and inflexion is extraordinary. In the other roles, the producers wisely turned to the English stage and won Sophie Thompson as Miss Bates and Juliet Stevenson as Mrs Elton. Both deserve cameo Oscars. The men are less right - Mr Elton too plain,

the start. When he and Emma first gaze at each other in the firelight, electricity and wedding bells are already in the air. Despite his cold reprimand of Emma for her rudeness to Miss Bates on Box Hill, these are always two lovers circling each other, waiting to clinch. answer to Four Weddings and a Funeral: four weddings and a stately home. It offers a younger Jane Austen, of sense redeeming sensibility, of the Age of Reason marking out the boundaries for the Age of Romance. Emma the book is a different story with a darker theme. It is that of age auditing youth. Forgiveness, and eventually love, comes only after a fearful scolding. Knightley begins as Emma's uncle—"the only one who tells me my faults"—becomes her mentor and only ends as her husband. Even then she cannot bring herself to call him by his first name. This is the tale of the "older man". It was the work of Austen's own maturity. completed in 1816 shortly before her fatal illness. She made Knightley the same age as herself — I cannot believe by Middlemarch and Pride and Prejudice were long enough to attempt some truth to the original. Where they diverged was irritating, to those who respect the original even maddening. There is nothing in George Eliot's novel to suggest that it was Casaubon who was sexually frigid - only the BBC's yearning for a bed scene. In Pride and Prejudice, the character of Mrs Bennet so embodies the title that we must feel some sympathy for her predicament. By making her a clown, the BBC tore the heart from the drama and replaced it with Punch and Judy.

A feature film is different. It has just 90 minutes to strut the stage. Adaptation of a novel can only be "free". I preferred Sense and Sensibility, a film, to Pride and Prejudice on television, largely because it made little pretence to dramatise a book. It was a film, a glorious swirl of girls pining and men trilling. Buildings and landscape were used as Austen never used them, but to brilliant effect. Austen's contrast of sense (Elinor) and sensibility (Marianne) was easy to deconstruct and recreate in celluloid.

The film of Emma is a version of the novel in the same sense as the recent Hollywood comedy Clueless. which set Emma in modern dress. But what it lost in subtlety it gained beautifully acted and photographed love story. I am sure Jane Austen would have winced at the casting, but she would have happily settled in her parlour at Chawton to count the royalties.

Nothing vindicates these revivals so much as the path they beat back to their originals. The critics sneer that modern youth has to take its literature in visual form. This is simply untrue. By next month Emma will be the most read novel in England. I find this exhilarating. Jane Austen's creed was timeless. She held that the actions which matter most in life are those that govern personal relationships. Such actions may be conditioned by place, birth and money - as they still are - but this is mere backdrop. In the beginning was the heart and it remains to the end. In Northanger Abbey, she wrote that a novelist must convey "the most thorough knowledge of human nature and the happiest delineation of its varieties". She achieved this within the confines of four families locked in an English village. Genius needs no wider canvas. The cinema's rediscovery of Austen testifies to the power of her creed. We should shout it from the aisles and across the popcorn. Hiding behind the frocks and the frolics, the tantrums and the tears is a good book waiting to be read. It is worth a thousand movies.

LET'S GO FLY A KITE

Labour is in danger of spinning out of control

There is a technique of political presentation. as commonly used as it is cynical, known as "kite-flying". It involves leaking a policy proposal, assessing the public response and then, if necessary, either denying that the policy was ever under consideration or moderating it to suit the reaction. The Labour Party has become particularly enamoured of this method, and it is endangering the very reputation for straight-dealing which Tony Blair has won for himself.

Mr Blair's backroom spin doctors have long been in danger of disappearing up their own vortex. Now his front benchers are joining in. Stephen Byers, Labour's Employment Shadow, had dinner on Wednesday with four journalists, among them our chief political correspondent. Jill Sherman, Each of them reported yesterday that Labour was considering balloting its members on cutting the party's links with the trade unions if the unions provoked a "summer of discontent" under a new Labour government. But by yesterday morning, the story was being hotly denied by Mr Byers, who said the reports were "prime candidates for the Booker Prize for Fiction".

This newspaper is in the business of fact, not fiction. Our reporters do not make up stories; they use their experience and expertise to extract the truth from what can often be a complicated web of deceit or distortion designed to portray the informant in a good light. In this case, we stand by our story and leave readers to judge whether they believe Mr Byers's version or ours.

For he has a special interest in behaving as he did. All week, Labour spokesmen have been addressing two audiences: one inside and the other outside the Blackpool Winter Gardens. To the wider world, they have been polishing their modern, even rightwing, credentials. Back in the TUC conference, they have been toning down their statements, trying to reassure the old guard that the "wilder" press accounts are not to be believed.

To an extent these tactics have succeeded. Labour has given notice this week that, in government, it would deal with the TUC little more favourably than any other interest group, such as the CBI. Mr Blair no longer treats his party as the political arm of the trade union movement. He knows that if he governed in a sectional rather than national interest, he would be thrown out of office at the earliest opportunity. This week his spokesmen were trying to prepare the unions for a 1990s Labour government which, if Mr Blair and his colleagues held their nerve, would be quite different from what the unions enjoyed in the 1970s.

This goes down well with the voters. But it angers many trade unionists. With each general election defeat and subsequent period of Conservative office, there is more back pay to be reclaimed, there are more laws to be repealed. If Labour were to win, some of them still think it would be a Second Coming. This is the illusion that Mr Blair needs to dispel. There is sense in him bringing trades unionists back to earth before an election rather than after.

His message has dangers too, though. There are voters on the old Left who may become so disillusioned that they will simply not bother to vote come polling day. Too much realism now may put them off. This is the price Mr Blair pays for honesty. But there is a price to pay for dishonesty too. The more that Labour muddles its message and plays to two different audiences, the less trustworthy it appears. Mr Blair, unlike many of his predecessors, seems frank and honest. He should do all in his power to protect that reputation. Once lost, it is near

A fight against winds, waves, pollution and neglect

Of the multiple perils that Venice has faced in its long history, fatalism about this most precarious as well as most beautiful of cities has been the greatest. The assumption that Venice was irreparably headed into physical decay and pauperisation has been current at least since Byron lamented its "fall" in 1818; by the mid-19th century, Dickens took for granted his pleasure in Venice as a "ghostly the most catastrophic floods in its history. the obituaries appeared only mildly premature. The city was literally sinking into the lagoon in which, by miracles of early engineering skills, it had been set.

Venice is sinking no more, thanks to an international rescue effort which has stabilised the water table and restored much of its physical fabric to better condition than it has been in since the Republic fell to Napoleon in 1797. Considerable credit for converting the shock of the 1966 disaster into a lasting programme of practical restoration work lies with a Venetian resident and former British Ambassador to Italy, the late Sir Ashley Clarke. On Monday Venice in Peril, the charity he founded, will mark its 25th anniversary with an exhibition at the Italian Trade Centre in Piccadilly. It is welldesigned, informative and modest - as is the organisation whose work it celebrates.

Its comprehensive restoration of the Madonna dell'Orto. Tintoretto's lovely Gothic parish church, was the first largescale project undertaken in Venice after the 1966 flood and has been the model for other restorers. Among its 19 projects are such familiar tourist landmarks as the principal entrance to the Doge's Palace. But Venice in Peril's influence has been based not just on the painstaking, necessarily piecemeal work of cleaning stones, statues and paintings. In a city whose prewar population of 170,000 has shrunk to 70,000, it has had the vitality of Venetian neighbourhoods constantly in mind. In the debate on how best the conservation of Venice's artistic inheritance can be combined with ways to revive the city's faltering economic pulse, it has played a role far beyond its financial contribution.

also its bane; at high season, the place almost chokes with day-trippers who add little to its income while straining an urban fabric exceptionally unsuited to mass traffic. The energy that is going into rebuilding La Fenice, its exquisite opera house gutted by fire last January, reflects not just emotion but the vital importance of sustaining Venice's reputation as a cultural centre.

Beyond that, there are no easy answers -Venice is fortunate to have escaped one grand solution dreamt up a century ago, which proposed wholesale clearances and redevelopment, including the creation of wide boulevards so that motor cars could bring to Venice the prosperity of modern life. Yet the information age would seem to be made for a city that owes so much of its historical prosperity to the "service industries" of its banks and entrepot trade. Politically, it is now better managed than in the years when the Christian Democrats and Socialists carved up the spoils of local government; the new urban plan places proper emphasis on affordable housing for white-collar workers. Twenty-five years ago, the question was whether Venice could physically be saved; the fact that today's debate is about how to make it prosper is a tribute to a remarkable, even if far from complete, rescue operation.

BEAM ME UP, SCOTTY

Will people wear their brains on their sleeves?

Those who feel that they cannot keep up with Their neighbours in Mensa or worry that their brain cells have lost a volt or two can now put their names down for a transplant that boffins promise will soon be on the way. Within a few years, visionaries told the British Association for the Advancement of Science this week, surgeons will be able to implant a tiny microchip at the back of the human brain. This will do everything from restoring people's sight to allowing troops in a war zone to communicate with base by beaming up the military map to the squaddies brain chips and bringing them home on autopilot.

The possibilities are endless. Chips could be designed to make your chess game unbeatable, or transmit the secrets of French cuisine through your visual cortex so that a gourmet feast flashes upon the inward eye whenever you are stuck for what to give the guests for dinner. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology is already working on the development of special shoes to store static electricity from the carpet to power the chips; other researchers must surely be investigating how the phrase "photographic nemory" can make even the most fiendish examinations mere child's play.

Even before the scalpels are out to create bionic man, the slip-on version will soon be in all the shops. The portable computer is now available, cunningly disguised as a watch or musical T-shirt. With most of Britain already covered by mobile phone demanding their own numbers as soon as they can talk, and a lifelong hook-up to cyberspace will be included in recommended books on parenting. Already, smart computers can recognise voices, and at the wink of a familiar eye can open the garage door or turn on the oven. Indeed, if research into the harnessing of electrical brainwaves to power chairs for the handicapped can be extended, it will not be long before you need only look with a concentrated air at your wrist-computer to have your household chores accomplished in a trice.

There are drawbacks to this brave new world. No computer is infallible or proof against human boisterousness. What if a grain of sand, trapped in the works during a frolic on the beach, dispatched that incomplete letter of resignation to your boss? Or will a rather too vigorous embrace in the back row of the cinema burnt the dinner and had the bath overflowing?

Not everyone, of course, will want to programme their lives with off-the-peg software. A few rebels - an artist, perhaps, or an aspiring poet - may pluck the cell from their brains, or at least smash the brain on their wrists and trust, foolishly, to human intuition. Others may favour the pre-cyber look, and keep a computerised gold timepiece on a waistcoat chain, which flashes its commands with a purringly old-fashioned tic. Hardware shops will mean something very different to future generations; and youngsters will look back on Star Trek and giggle at its naivety.

From Viscount Caldecote, FEng

Sir, There is much good sense in the article by Lord Hanson ("Why I can't do business with Blair". September 10; letters. September 12), the subheading of which says that "the boardroom has much to fear from new Labour". But if those fears are to be liars there is much that we Conservatives have to do in promoting the Prime Minister's admirable objective of creating a nation at ease with itself.

Excesses in the boardroom need to be curbed. These include absurdly inflated pay with the addition of easy-to-achieve "incentive" schemes, excessive share option schemes with no downside risk, and vast *compensation" payments for those who fail in their job.

Complaints of such abuses are usually countered by claims that such decisions are ultimately the responsibility of the shareholders, when the board's remuneration committee falls down on its job. That is true, but how often do institutional shareholders (the effective owners of most large ples) carry out these responsibilities? Clearly far too seldom; but when occasionally they do, they can be most effective.

The existing regime of "self-regula-tion" by shareholders is not working well enough, and there is a need for legislation. For instance, it should only be permissible for share options to be granted pro rata to shareholding; incentive schemes should apply to all employees, not just to a privileged few, as is already the case in profit-sharing schemes. Loyalty and unity of purpose are priceless assets in any organisation. They are not encouraged by such excesses and perceived unfairness. which do no good to the Conservative cause either.

Yours faithfully. CALDECOTE, House of Lords. September 12.

From the President of the Board of Trade

Sir, Lord Hanson is right to highlight the dangers to the economy of a Labour government. This Government has promoted sustained economic growth by working with the market rather than trying to regulate it.

Whilst some regulation is, of course, needed, the Government's attitude is always to question why, and to interiere in the market only when absolutely necessary. Competition policy is a good example; our emphasis on encouraging vigorous and fair competition recognises the contribution it can make to the competitiveness of British business and to securing value for money for customers. Similarly, the Government's optout from the social chapter will free British business from the burdens imposed by the regime of regulation and compulsion on our EU competitors. Little wonder, therefore, that we continue to attract almost 40 per cent of Japanese and US investment into the EU; that we have more of our population of working age in employment than any other major EU country and that our unemployment rate is far below the EU average.

These benefits have come from policies designed to create an environment which encourages enterprise and competition. British business will not thank a government that puts those achievements in danger.

Yours sincerely, IAN LANG. Department of Trade and Industry. Ashdown House, Victoria Street, SW1. September 12

From Professor Emeritus Nicholas Kurti, FRS

Sir, Lord Hanson writes, "While posing as a friend of small businesses. Labour plans to impose on them the social chapter . .

May I quote from the Treaty on European Union (Maastricht, 1992), which contains the social chapter, that Article 2, paragraph 2 of the Agreement on Social Policy clearly states that ... directives shall avoid imposing administrative, financial and legal constraints in a way which would hold back the creation and development of small and mediumsized undertakings."

The publishers who reissued the treaty a few months after it first appeared seem to have chosen, tongue in cheek, an appropriate title — The Unseen Treaty - because it appeared so few had actually read it.

Yours faithfully. N. KURTI, University of Oxford. Department of Physics. Clarendon Laboratory, Park Road, Oxford. September 12.

From Mr L. Cooley

Sir. I feel sure that most of Lord Hanson's very disappointed shareholders will welcome Tony Blair as their next Prime Minister.

Yours faithfully. L. COOLEY, Fairmead, Surbiton. Surrey.

'Taller, bigger, glossier' buildings on London's skyline

From Professor Maxwell Hutchinson Sir, Height alone is not the critical issue in the evaluation of a building. The question is whether or not it is truly good architecture. The tower at Canary Wharf is a dull update of the heavyweight Manhartan construction of the 1930s. The

Grade 11 listed Centre Point makes its mark through surface texture and form. The NatWest Tower is a worthy landmark, with its plan shape born out of the company's logo and its fractured skyline. Sir Norman Foster's proposed Millennium Tower, to be erected in the City on the site of the bomb-damaged Baltic Exchange (report and photograph, September 10), seems imbued with the same architectural quality and originality as his justly famous Hong Kong and Shanghai

From Mr G. Roland Adamson

September 11.

Sir, It shouldn't be too difficult for Mr Peter Rees, the City of London's planning officer, to recommend re-fusal of permission for Sir Norman Foster's "crowning glory [?] for London skyline", as your headline (September 10) puts it. All he has to do is rigorously apply the worthy principles of the Listed Buildings Act 1990 and the ministerial guidance set out in Planning and the Historic Environ-ment (PPG 15, Sections 2.11-2.17). Sir Norman's tower, and the pro-posed dreadful South Bank Ferris wheel (report, April IS; letters, April 24. May 27. June 4, 14, 19, must between them affect more than a few important listed buildings and nat-ional monuments — and should be refused on that ground alone.

G. ROLAND ADAMSON (Town planning and development consultant). Ivy Cottage, Charing Hill, Charing, Ashford, Kent.

From Mr Christopher K. Makin

Sir. If Sir Norman Foster's proposed tower is to be challenged on the ground of scale, what might have been the fate of Sir Christopher Wren's St Paul's Cathedral in a 17thcentury context?

Yours faithfully. CHRISTOPHER MAKIN. 25 Hampstead Lane, N7.

From Mr Andrew Tobin

Sir, Taller, bigger and glossier buildings may be appropriate for those rapidly developing cities of the Far East which are desperately trying to surpass their neighbours, or North America, where skyscrapers are a well established architectural genre. London, however, is an ancient and mature city with a well established sense of identity and should have no need to enter into this competition as if it represents an end in itself.

Yours faithfully, ANDREW TOBIN, Flat D, 13 Queen Square, WCl. September 10.

From Mr L. B. Kapp

Sir. The number of daytime occupants of the new building proposed for the Baltic Exchange site must run into thousands.

Surely the body which should be most closely involved in discussions is the transport planning department of the City of London, if there is such a thing. At the moment it does not seem as if there is.

Yours sincerely, B. KAPP. 109 Drapers Copse. Dibden, Southampton.

From Mr Michael Saxby

Sir, Building glass gives the terrorist his shrapnel. I cannot understand how Sir Norman Foster can so disregard the lessons from the injuries and material damage caused by the explosion outside the Baltic Exchange.

Yours faithfully, MICHAEL SAXBY, Southlands, Stowmarket Road, Woolpit, Bury St Edmunds, Suffolk. September 10.

Sir. Now that whole ice shelves in Antarctica are disappearing as global warming takes hold, perhaps Sir Nor-man Foster should incorporate into his design provision in the ground floor for the docking of gondolas and

Smacking and parental authority

From Mr Peter Newell

Sir, Your leading article of September 11. "This is going to hurt us", about the application concerning corporal punishment which has been declared admissible by the European Commission of Human Rights, implies that such matters are best left to "natural parental authority", and that those who support the boy's application are guilty of equating a thrashing with a smack. Such arguments confuse rather an clarify the issue. This boy's application is not about smacking. It is about the failure of current English law to protect children from treatment which would amount to actual or grievous bodily harm if aimed at an adult. The repeated caning of the boy causing weals is not disputed. As the Committee on the Rights of the Child concluded when it examined the UK's initial report on implementing the UN Convention last year, "the imprecise nature of the expression of reasonable chastisement . . . may pave the way for it to be interpreted in a subjective and arbitrary manner". A committee member told the British delegation that "no one would argue that a reasonable level of wife-beating should be permitted" and that "the UK position represented a vestige of the outdated view that children were in a sense their parents' chattels".

If the exception of "reasonable chastisement" were removed, so that children had the same protection under the law on assault as adults there would be no question of trivial assaults of children getting to court, any more than trivial assaults be-

From Dr Anne-Carole Chamier

Sir. Fashionable restaurants serving dishes featuring wild mushrooms have promoted a vast industry in these fungi. In Britain the picking of wild mushrooms commercially is illegal. Professional mycologists like myself are extremely worried at the damage caused to natural ecosystems by this commercial exploitation.

In the New Forest, which has been subject to ruthless over-picking, a ban on all collectors has been set. But other areas of Britain are affected too advertisements for wild mushrooms appear regularly in local Commercial picking is having a noticeable effect: places in Ross and Cromarty that were covered in chanterelles ten years ago are now barren, and other species such as ceps have been similarly devastated.

Fungi play a vital role in natural ecosystems, mainly as decomposers of dead matter which they recycle for the growth and development of new organisms. They are also essential living partners to many trees and plants. If mushrooms and toadstools are removed these fungi cannot reproduce themselves properly and the colonies soon die off. Perhaps those ordering or buying wild mushrooms could bear these points in mind.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant, CAROLE CHAMIER, Achandunie House, Ardross By Alness, Ross and Cromarty.

From Mr F. Irish

Sir, You report ("News in brief", later editions, September 7) that a Home Office study has concluded that "Police speed cameras should be moved to less obvious positions because drivers are getting used to them". Surely the cameras should be placed where it is known that excessive speeds contribute to accidents, and the effectiveness should be measured by fewer accidents. For motorists to know their position surely helps this.

You also report that the cameras raised £6.7 million in fines. Does the Home Office consider that the primary objective of use of the cameras is to raise revenue?

Yours faithfully. F. IRISH, 18 The Common, W5.

End of the road From Mr Norman Goldner

Sir. Absolutely brilliant — choosing to illustrate the feature on road building in your "Century of the Car" supple-ment (September 9) with a picture of the construction in 1969 of the MI slip-roads at Junction 2 in Hendon. The closure of these very slip-roads at four hours' notice in July because they are likely to collapse (report. August I) neatly symbolises the entire history of the British motor industry.

Yours faithfully, NORMAN GOLDNER 21 Luther Close, Edgware, Middlesex.

From Sir Albert McQuarrie

Sir, Under the heading "Australians want Macquarie cottage" you report (News in brief, September 9) that Australian politicians want to buy the last home of Major-General Lachlan Macquarie (1761-1824) situated in Mull. and have it re-erected in Sydney, New South Wales. The prospects of this happening are, in my view, negligible.

The interior of one room of this house was shipped to Mcquarrie University, Sydney, early in the 1980s and the present owners of the estate (who have been advised that I am writing to you) are not prepared to sell the house for taking down stone by stone.

Lachlan Macquarie's remains lie in Ulva, Mull, and the house is of considerable historic interest to Mcquarries world wide, in whatever form their name is spelt. We are all proud of our forebear, and if the house has sadly fallen into a state of disrepair urgent steps will be taken to rectify the matter. The Clan Mcquarrie Association in the United Kingdom is being reactivated, under my chairmanship, and will be making this a matter for priority action.

Our association supports the present owners' wish to secure fundng in order to keep the house in Scotland and to create a lasting memorial to Lachlan Macquarie. Australians will be more than welcome to visit Mull and do homage to the memory of the "Father of Australia".

Yours sincerely, ... ALBERT McQUARRIE. Crimond, 11 Balcomie Crescent, Troon. Ayrshire.

Lyceum Theatre

From the Director of the Theatres Trust

Sir, As freeholder of the Lyceum Theatre we greatly welcome the redevelopment now being carried out by Apollo Leisure (report, September 7). This will return one of London's finest theatres to its original use 58 years after it was purchased for demolition by the old London County Council. Your description of it as a "Regency theatre" may confuse, however.

The Regency-period Lyceum occupied a nearby site, but was burnt down in 1830. Only the giant portico now survives from its 1834 successor on the present site. This was the theatre built by Samuel Beazley and immortalised by Sir Henry Irving.

Today's Lyceum was built in 1904 to the designs of Bertie Crewe and was one of the most flamboyant of all the Edwardian variety houses. Indeed it was intended to rival the London Coliseum built in the same year and now occupied by English National

So when the Lyceum reopens this autumn its audiences will enter through an early Victorian portico, sit in an Edwardian auditorium, and watch performances on a stage that has been completely rebuilt and equipped to meet the standards of the 21st century. I am sure Sir Henry Irving would approve, but there's not much left that he would recognise.

Yours faithfully. PETER LONGMAN, Director, The Theatres Trust, 22 Charing Cross Road, WC2. September 9.

From Mr Edward F. Northcote

Sir, We should consider that the French just might be right to stop messing about with their clocks (report and leading article, September 6). "Daylight saving" was introduced when social conditions and business practice were very different from today. Then the daily routine of an office was dictated by the posts; now much of the mail comes in electronically through the day.

Then, if the City of London wanted to get up an hour earlier in summer. everybody else had to follow suit; now they would not. Firms which wanted to open their offices earlier in summer would be able to do so. Some might not, so the rush hours would be less

Take a raincheck?

From Mr John N. Parter

Sir. I was very interested to read (News in Brief, September 6) that a total eclipse of the Sun is "scheduled" for August 11, 1999.

Since the use of that word normally refers to a proposal for a future plan of action, can one assume that the eclipse will go ahead provided the weather is suitable on the day? Or is there perhaps a hint that it may be a part of the programme of the Almighty for the millennium celebra-

Golden Hinde finds her final berth

By Alan Hamilton

LONDON has yet another new old ship. A replica of Sir Francis Drake's Golden Hinde, in which the roguish hero circumnavigated the world between 1577 and 1580. has taken up a permanent retirement berth on the Thames after a colourful late 20th-century career of her own. From today the reconstructed galleon, 300 tons of stout English oak built at Appledore, Devon, in 1973, opens as a floating museum of the Elizabethan maritime experience. hidden in a dock down the back alleys of Southwark and competing in the increasingly crowded virtual history market with

The replica was commissioned by an American consortium who wished to exhibit her on the San Francisco waterfront in commemoration of Drake's claiming of California for the English Crown. Since then she has covered 140,000 miles under sail, probably more than the original, circumnavigating the globe once and plying regularly across both Atlantic and Pacific.

The Americans eventually tired of her, mooring ber in a boatyard at Troon, Avrshire, to be cared for and maintained. Roddy Coleman, 50, the yard owner, eventually bought her, sailed her some more, and has now found her permanent moorings at St Mary Overie Dock, across the river from that newer and infinitely larger superannu-ated warship, HMS Belfast.

Mr Coleman plans to employ a costumed crew, and to invite parties of schoolchildren to learn Elizabethan seamanship. He may have to brush up a little on historical detail; at the opening party yesterday the actress dressed as Drake's patron, Elizabeth I, was wearing a wedding ring.

JAMES GULLIVER

James Gulliver, CVO, former chairman of the Argyl! Group, died of a heart attack on September 12 aged 66. He was born on August 17, 1930, hen, in December 1985, James Gulliver launched his bid for the drinks giant Distillers, the name of his company. Argyll Group. was hardly known outside the Ciry. Yet, even in a year of audacious corporate cannibalism such as 1985 was, the Argyll Group's £1.9 billion offer was spectacularly breathtaking. Certainly it put in the shade Guinness's bid, made during the summer, of £300 million for the whisky firm Arthur Bell, of "Afore Ye

For James Gulliver it was a long. long way from his father's grocery shop in Campbeltown, Argyllshire. Most of his career had been spent in retailing. He had, notably, revitalised the Fine Fare supermarket chain as its managing director and chairman in the 1970s and had been named Young Businessman of the Year in 1972 before striking out on his own with Argyll.

Indeed, it was a desire to return to his roots and prove himself on his home ground that led Gulliver to bid for Distillers. The company, though one of Scotland's most famous, was then in decline, with its home market share in whisky down to 15 per cent from 75 per cent in the 1960s.

Yet Distillers, notwithstanding that its creaking federal system was outdated and many of its brand names were fighting against each other, was still rich in assets. Among other things it was owner of that *perhaps most famous of all Scotch whiskies. Johnnie Walker, and of the brand name synonymous with gin -Gordons. Had Gulliver pulled the deal off it would have established him as the most powerful of Scotland's business sons and crowned his career with the kind of success for which he had always hungered.

But it was not to be. Guinness, in the person of Ernest Saunders, now takeover had been so great that no such bid would be considered, he entered into highly secret negotiations with the board of Distillers. Somewhat alarmed by Gulliver's radical restructuring plans for Distillers, its directors — always a fundamentally conservative bunch at heart - were much more amenable to the Guinness approach. When Argyll found out what was going on and counter-attacked with a higher price, £2.3 billion, Saunders himself riposted, with a complex series of share support operations which ap-peared to sustain the value of the Guinness bid, and at the same time to carry assurances that Distillers need not fear restructuring of the kind it apprehended from Gulliver.

In what was to begin as the most acrimonious of takeovers and become the biggest business scandal of the 1980s, Sullivan lost his bid to Guinness, which then abandoned all the promises on restructuring it had made to its new acquisition. But the roughest takeover the City had seen in years turned into a notorious fraud case when four businessmen stood trial for the manipulation of the Guinness share price which had enabled it to triumph over Argyll. In August 1990 Ernest Saunders received a jail sentence for his part in the illegal share support operation. Sullivan always felt bitter over being, as he saw it, cheated out of a takeover which would have been good for Scotland and was a matter of personal pride. If it is an exaggeration to say it broke his spirit, then he never quite recovered from it. Apart from anything else the cost of his failed bid eventually came to more than £34 million. There were to be further advances for Argyll, such as the takeover of the British arm of the American-owned Safeway chain in 1987. But the acquisition on which Sullivan had set his heart, as the crowning achievement of his business career, was denied to him.

James Gerald Gulliver was born in Argyll and educated at Campbeltown Grammar School and the University of Glasgow. He later had a period of study in America at the Georgia Institute of Technology.

Between 1956 and 1959 he served in the Royal Navy on a short service commission before embarking on a career in management consultancy with Urwick, Orr & Partners in 1961. But telling other people how to run their companies when he had never run one himself was not really to his taste. It was his move to Fine Fare in 1965 which gave him the opportunity to show what he was made of. At that time the supermarket chain was making substantial losses. Gulliver started in a modest But what he achieved there in a very short time saw his translation to managing director of the whole Fine Fare operation within a matter of months. He revitalised the chain from top to bottom and by the 1970s it had gone into a handsome profit, earning for Sullivan, who was its chairman from 1967 to 1972, a businessman of the year award.

This was a triumph of major proportions, but working for others was not his metier. He left Fine Fare enough way on the shopfitting side. intending to set up in the food and drinks business on his own, taking it as a sort of backhanded compliment that the company managed legally to prevent him from setting up in opposition. He next bought a stake in Oriel, a food distribution business. He built it up substantially and when it was bought out in 1974 by the American entertainments company RCA he made his first million.

After a few more operations — very much caretaker stuff by his standards - he took a stake in Louis C. Edwards, an ailing Manchester butchery firm. This became the launching pad for a business career which — most satisfyingly — included his taking over his old company Oriel. He also acquired Allied Suppliers from James Goldsmith. The subsequent acquisition of the Scottish grocery chains Galbraith and Templeton and a merger with Amalgamated Distilled Products saw him at the head of one of Britain's largest food and drinks groups. In 1977 James Gulliver Associates was born, soon to become the Argyll Group.

After the catastrophe of the Distillers affair and the losses it involved, Argyll naturally had to pause. When Sullivan decided to move ahead again, the acquisition of the 130 Safeway supermarkets in Britain put the firm into third place in the British supermarket league behind Tesco and Sainsbury. But with the business ethos becoming less buoyant as the 1980s drew to a close, a buyout of the carpet and furniture empire Lowndes Queensway in 1988 proved to be something of a disaster. Losses mounted, the company went into receivership and in 1990 Sullivan stepped down as chairman. He had already relinquished the chairmanship of the Argyll Group.

It was the end of his business career, but he continued to be active in a number of spheres. He was a vice-president of Manchester United FC and a vice-chairman of Hearts. In addition he was a trustee of the Duke of Edinburgh's Award Scheme, work for which he was apointed CVO in this year's Birthday Honours.

He was four times married and is survived by his fourth wife Melanie, and by the three sons and two daughters of his first marriage.

JOANNE DRU

Joanne Dru, screen actress, died on September 10 aged 73. She was born on January 3L, 1923.

JOANNE DRU was a stun-ning American actress of the 1940s and 1950s, who combined the colouring of Vivien Leigh with the screen magnetism of Ava Gardner. She made about 40 films, many of them westerns, including Red River, She Wore a Yellow Ribbon and Wagonmaster. Had she not been so irreverent towards Hollywood, she could certainly have gone further. As it was, she worked hard only when she needed to, and two of her four husbands, the singer Dick Haymes and a businessman, C. V. Wood. were fabulously wealthy men.

Joanne LaCock, as she was christened, was born in Logan, West Virginia. Her father, a pharmacist, died when she was 14 and she and her mother and brother Peter senled in New York, Joanne and Peter changed their surname to Marshall (Peter became a celebrated gameshow host). Joanne, at 14, became a photographic model. At 15 she was dancing in shows and at 18 she was married to a young singer, Dick Haymes.

She stayed with Haymes for seven turbulent years, during which time she had three children and watched him become a big star. But the swiftness of his success unsettled him and he began to drink heavily. He and Joanne were divorced in 1949, by which time her own career as an actress had taken off.

This had come about by accident when her friend Margaret Sheridan had become pregnant during the preproduction of Howard Hawks's Red River. Hawks could not film around her, so Sheridan suggested he should hire Joanne instead. Taking the screen name of Dru. Joanne gave an excellent performance as a gun-toting heroine.

Red River took four years to be released and in the interim her second film, Abie's Irish Rose (1946), was released. But when Red River did finally hit the cinemas in 1948 it made Dru a star. This was just as well because her marriage, career, was in tatters.

Dru, however, did not take her art particularly seriously. Among other things, she said, the boned bodices of the obligatory long gingham were miserable to dresses Westerns remained Dru's speciality. John Ford, (whose was Dru's best friend), cast her in two classic westerns. In She Wore a Yellow Ribbon (1949), her favourite film, she played Olivia, the woman beloved by two young lieutenants who each vie to have her wear a ribbon as a love token. John Wayne, this time cast as a grizzled cavalry officer. looked after her on set. Ford was obviously keen to pro-mote Dru and the new Ben Johnson and gave them good parts and lots of close-ups. Ford also cast her Wagonmaster (1950), again opposite Ben Johnson, in a film about a Mormon wagon train. More westerns followed in the 1950s, none of them as distinguished as these three early classics: Vengeance Valley (1951), The Siege at Red River (1954), The Wild and the Innocent (1959). Two of her few non-westerns were the interesting crime melodrama 711 Ocean Drive (1950) and a biography of the baseball star Dizzy Dean in The Pride of St Louis (1952), in which she showed that she could also play comedy. She had her own television series in the early 1960s, Guestward Ho, about a New York couple who give up city life to run a New Mexico

Her acting career had slipped into second gear but she did not bemoan the fact. In 1949 she had married the actor John Ireland, whom she met on the set of Red River. After that and another brief marriage had ended in divorce, she married her fourth and last husband, C. V. Wood, the president of an oil company. They remained together happily for 26 years until his death. Dru no longer needed to work, and devoted her life to entertaining friends and to travelling.

Her husband owned land in Arizona and it was his lasting distinction to be remembered as the man who brought the present London Bridge's rather unremarkable predecessor to the American desert. He initially believed himself to be buying Tower Bridge and to be saving it from decay and demolition. Indeed at one point he accidently described his intended purchase as "the leaning Tower of Pisa". But his mistake, once discovered, natured "Woody", who proudly erected the landmark on American soil, even though he had to divert a river to do so.

He died four years ago. A daughter, Barbara Nugent (named after John Ford's daughter), also predeceased Joanne Dru. She is survived by her other daughter and by a son from her first marriage.

Donaldson's portrait of the Queen wearing the robes of the Order of the Thistle

David Donaldson, the Queen's Painter and Limner in Scotland, died on August 22 aged 80. He was born on June 29, 1916.

TO BE painted by David Donaldson — and many of the great and the good sat for him down the years - was to experience not just the close attention of an artist rooted in the Scottish colourist tradition, but the congenial company of a great wit and raconteur. Donaldson's sense of humour was pure Glasgow, his language as colourful as his canvases, and his stock of anecdotes, many told against himself, apparently limitless.

His students at the Glasgow School of Art where he first learnt, then taught for more than 50 years, adored him because he never spoke down to them, instead sitting beside them and talking them through their work, sometimes using his own brush to explain a point. A volatile man, his temper could be awesome, but he was rarely angry for long, and he would make amends with the offer of a bacon roll or a glass of white

As an artist, he may be remembered more for his still lifes, which reflected what he called "the immaculate grammar and beauty of paint", than for his portraits, which were of uneven quality. His exuberance did not always sit easily with the gravity required for official studies of such subjects as the Queen or Margaret Thatcher. But his self-portraits - naked, with nattily dressed with fish supper - reflected a natural irreverence.

Later on they became darker and more introspective, and his Self-Portrait in Winter, painted in 1978, may well rank as his best. He had no time for the abstract and was impatient of students who rejected the discipline of draughtsmanship. "In Glasgow drawing was holy writ," he told his biographer, W. Gordon Smith. in 1995. "There was no talk of aesthetics, none of the semiamateurish psychiatry which modern art schools have doused themselves with. It was purely an engineering process and it stayed with me all the time I was in the school of art - and still does."

David Abercrombie Donaldson was born in poverty. and brought up in extraordinary circumstances — "a wee bastard who was bairned up a close in Coatbridge" as he described himself. Fostered out by his unmarried parents, he was brought back to his grandparents' council house at the age of four. There he grew up under the same roof as his natural father, but without being told who he was David imagined he was a big brother.

PUBLIC NOTICES

Later, even more bizarrely, his natural mother was employed there as a housemaid, again without David knowing who she was. And, in a final kilt at the age of eleven to attend their wedding, though it was not until he had reached his teens that he was informed that they were his parents. Given such a disturbed childhood, it is remarkable that Donaldson became a life-enhancing figure.

At school he was encouraged by a teacher and a local Baptist minister to apply for entry to the Glasgow School of Art, and, despite a complete lack of qualifications, he was admitted at the age of 15. He described it as "a flight from reality", and for the first few years he just "hung around" though he enjoyed the lifeclasses. Then he was taken up by the school's director, William (later Sir William), Hutchison who recognised his artistic ability and encouraged him to express himself directly through paint. He also helped him socially and financially. Hugh Crawford, acknowledged as one of the greatest of Glasgow's art teachers, also became his mentor, and Ian Fleming, who thought he was the outstanding student of his generation, taught him etching. In 1937 Hutchison awarded Donaldson the Haldane travelling scholarship, a coveted prize which allowed him to go to Paris and Florence. "The book was opened for me at just the right place," he was to say later. "It would be truthful to

Soon after his return Hutchison offered Donaldson five shillings an hour to teach in the night school. In 1940 he joined the staff of the GSA. and 27 years later was made head of the painting school, a post he held until 1981. Declared unfit for war service, partly because of his height (he was barely five feet tall) he carried on teaching through the war years. In 1942 he married Kathleen Boyd Maxwell, and then, when they in love with one his students. Marysia (Maria) Mora-Szorc, whom he described as "a wee Polish girl with an incredibly attractive accent". They were married in 1948, and her elfin features became the subject of scores of his paintings over the next 40 years.

Increasingly. Donaldson

was sought as a a portrait painter. Politicians, churchmen and captains of industry sat for him, and he relished the challenges they presented. Above all he enjoyed painting women. "You have," he said, "to paint from beneath your navel. Perhaps it's the best compliment you can pay to any woman. That approach did not, however, quite succeed when he was invited to paint Margaret Thatcher at the height of the Westland crisis. She gave him three hurried sittings and he acknowledged that it was "like writing a short story instead of a novel". On the other hand his Annette and the Elders. painted in 1980, is brimful of humanity and wry observation.

In 1977 he was appointed the Queen's Painter and Limner in Scotland, an honorary post rather like that of Poet Laureate, and he was given doctorates by both Strathclyde and Glasgow universities. Last June saw the publication of his biography, and, to mark his 80th birthday, a major retrospective exhibition at the Talbot Rice Gallery in Edinburgh. Both the book and the exhibition demonstrated the enthusiasm and energy of a genuine painter.

He is survived by his wife, Marysia, by a son from his first marriage, and by two daughters from his second.

DISRUPTING THE EMPIRE. TRADES CONGRESS RESOLUTION. (From Our Labour Correspondent.)

SCARBOROUGH, SEPT. 12

The Trades Union Congress, at its concluding session to-day, carried a resolution denouncing the private ownership of land and demanding its expropriation without compensation of any kind. It followed this by a resolution in opposition to Imperialism, which was made to appear as synonymous with "the domination of non-British occoles by the British Government", and this peoples by the British Government", and this domination was, in turn, described as "a form of capitalist exploitation having for its object the securing for British capitalists of cheap sources of raw materials and the right to exploit cheap and morganized labour and to use the competi cheap labour to degrade the workers's standards in Great Britain". The resolution went on to promise that congress would support the right of all peoples in the Empire to self-determination, including the right to choose complete separation from the Empire.

The Congress approached the resolutions as if they were commonplace maners and had no relation to affairs of the utmost political moment. It was an attenuated gathering, fully half the delegates having left, and it was dispatching the remaining items on the agenda at the rate of half a dozen in an hour. In this rush and bustle it decided that the landowners should be taxed out of existence and that the Fourier should be given over as prey to the disruptive forces which Moscow is letting loose against it. The resolution itself might have been drafted in Moscow, so closely did it conform to the lines on which the numist Party is conducting the campaign against this country.

Mr. J.H. Thomas, M.P. endeavoured to bring the delegates who remained to a sense of responsibility and some recognition of the true state of the case. He realised that the Congress would make itself ridiculous by passing summary judgement on a whole series of large and complicated problems affecting Egypt, Palestine, Kenya and the Union of South Africa after but a few moments' consideration. His experience at the Colonial Office enabled him to coint out that the

The intervention was without avail. It only served to provoke Mr. Harry Pollitt, the secretary of the Minority Movement, to attack Mr. Thomas and his Imperialism in the same way as, the day before, he had artfully made use of the opportunity provided by the discussion on the Davies Report to attack Mr. Ramsey MacDonald and to throw discredit on the Labour Government—an example of the Communist antagonism to the Socialism which adheres to the adjusted of demonstrate.

The result of the voting for the new General Council was announced but a question cross as to the accuracy of the figures and a recount was ordered. Most of the retiring members of the council who were opposed were re-elected. An exception to the rule was the defeat of Miss J. Varley, who is mescaded by Miss Benedicial The Varley, who is succeeded by Miss Bondfield. The uncontested elections returned Mr. J.H. Thomas. M.P., and Mr T. Richards, Mr. Richards takes the place of Mr. Herbert Smith as one of the miners' nominees. Mr. E. Bevin shares with Mr. B. Tillett the representation of the transport workers other than railwaymen. On the whole the council is rather less 'left' than its predecessor. All the retiring members who have manifested definitely Communist learnings have been returned, but, on the other hand, the anti-Communists have no better leadership. The pro-Communists do not

SATURDAY SEPTEMBER 14 1996

Edward Redfern prepares to race at Silverstone. The track's experts think Edward is so good, they have entered him in the senior Formula Ford category. He has his first taste of the full Formula in a 1.8-Zetec single seater next Sunday

dward Redfern is Brit-ain's fastest boy racer. Next week, the 17-yearold will line up on the grid at Brands Hatch, elevated into competition against seniors because of his outstanding prowess on the track.

Five days later, Edward holder of a race driver's licence. several times a winner and lap record holder — will attempt to conquer the one test he has so far failed in his fledgling career: he will try to get his driving licence. For Edward might be hot stuff on the circuit, but he failed when it mattered at the steering wheel of a humble Ford Escort diesel. His examiner decided that the boy who has roared through the chequered flag four times this season was "too hesitant" and refused him a licence to drive on the roads.

The irony is not lost on a young man whose calm manner and good sense has turned him into a junior Damon Hill. Irs strange because I haven't been dumped at the start line all season. But I clearly wasn't decisive enough when I sat my test for the first time. Let's hope the second time goes a little better," he says.

His karting skill is in the classic grand prix drivers' tradition

Johnny Herbert, Mika Hakkinen and David Coulthard - all started in go-karts. Edward was at the wheel aged ten, sharing a kart with a chum down the road in Fleet, Hampshire. The competi-tion was fierce — including one outing when the grid included two young men called William and Harry ... as in Windsor.

The princes were gifted karters, but Edward had already set his eyes on bigger things. As soon as he was 16, he cajoled his father, Derek, into a trip to the Silverstone Driving Centre, based at the famous Northamptonshire grand prix circuit, at the end of last season, to enter its Formula Ford championships. He only got a drive in the 1.6-litre single seater because a young American, coin-cidentally called Damon Hill, dropped out. Edward won. This season, with backing and tuition from the centre, he was on course to win the title, only needing a victory in the final race last Sunday at Silverstone.

iter six laps he was leading but he was rammed by a Brazilian in second place. For a while, it seemed like a shattered dream but the shunt did not end in failure because Silverstone's experts decided Edward was so good, they would enter him in the senior Formula Ford category for next season. He gets his first sample of the full Formula in a more powerful 1.8-Zetec single seater at Brands, the Kent circuit, next Sunday.

Then, backed with sponsorship worth about £30,000 from Philips Car Systems and a Silverstone car, Edward will battle for the Formula Ford title next year, the first step in what could become a career in racing. Derek says: "It costs around £75,000 to run a car for a season, the sort of money we haven't got. We are just an ordinary family and so far we have had the backing from the Silverstone Driving Centre and Philips which has made all the difference. But the test for Edward comes now because he is only at the very bottom of racing. He is a sensible lad and knows there is a long way to go yet."

In between Brands Hatch and next season lies that driving test. Edward is geared up and ready to go, the nerves more shredded than if he were in his helmet and race overalls ready to screech around a hairpin bend. "The technique is obviously different for racing and perhaps that was my problem last time." he says. "You can't really compare hitting the brakes at L30mph to get down to 40mph, at the same time heeling and toeing the clutch and brake pedal, with driving around town. You need discipline on the roads as much as on the track. I don't mind if I don't win next Sunday — but I really want to pass my driving test. Maybe I will have to work harder on that."

So close, but being rammed lost him a title

FORD'S NEW BABY

Ka: even the name is somewhat short new mini car — except that it's bigger than a Mini. The Ka, named after an Egyptian virility symbol was announced this week as a revolutionary city car with a irugal engine and seats for four. At 3.620 millimetres long. it is a tiddler against a Rolls-Royce, which is 5,268mm from Spirit of Ecstasy to rear bumper. Even Ford's own Mondeo mid-range model seems positively hefty by compari-son, with a bumper-tobumper length of 4,480mm. But the Ka, based on a Fiesta platform, is much bigger than true mini cars. a category really estab-lished in Britain 37 years ago by the definitive Mini

Tord has unveiled its when Sir Alec Issigonis packed an engine, boot and four people into a box just 10 feet (3.048mm) long. Ford says that this time, size really doesn't matter because the Ka is so pretty, it will turn more heads than any other small car on the roads. Its futuristic packaging, with snazzy angled lamps against a smooth bubbled body, is aimed at drivers who want a model distinctively different and could have a significant impact on Ford sales if it is

Ford needs to carve out a new sales niche when the Ka arrives in showrooms next month, because the company's factory at Valencia in Spain is geared up to make as many as 200,000 cars a year.

Why lost giraffes would crash less nsurance companies may not win any popularity contests. but they do produce some of the most interesting surveys aund. The latest one, from Eagle ir, featured in Car 96 last week, ntained something of a mystery: ly are some cities safer to drive in in others?

Part of the answer, in my opinion, that giraffes do not drive cars and r drivers do not have the faculties a giraffe. While you think about at, here is a reminder of what agle Star discovered.

The company divided the number policy holders in each of 19 cities the number of accidents they ported to produce a percentage sk. Birmingham came off worst at 3.1 per cent, Southampton best at .7 per cent. I think the fact that lasgow, Manchester and London gured among the five worst is a lue to why some cities are more angerous than others.

Although Eagle Star finds "no traightforward reason" for some ities being more dangerous than others. I think a reasonable guess can be made, based on the ordinary experience of driving around cities. Most accidents happen within a few miles of home, which would suggest that being a stranger in a city is not the problem. But that conclusion could be wrong: the accidents in the survey may have involved local people, but this does not mean they were caused by locals. I think that strangers to big cities cause accidents because they are constantly obliged to hunt around are. The search for a particular district, for example, is hampered by the fact that although the district may be signposted, there is often no indication when one has actually

And so to giraffes. These creatures are ideally suited to driving in unfamiliar cities, except where low bridges are involved. When it comes to craning the neck, the giraffe has

Your car's well, but are you?

So a giraffe driving along the M4 and arriving at Chiswick has none of the problems encountered by the rest us in the search for, say, Enfield. First, the giraffe could reach out of the sunroof and eat the huge bush which has obscured a crucial sign at the first roundabout it encounters.

Thereafter, the giraffe's powers of vision would enable it to pick out each of the streets it needed much faster than the rest of us. Most of ourstreet signs were put up by the Victorians, using dainty little oblongs of metal with dainty lettering. Some street signs are impossible to read at any distance. Either somebody has painted "Happy 50th George" on them or a postbox has been cleverly placed right in front of the sign. Most of the streets I search for seem to have three youths lolling against the street sign. They appear to have been given my itinerary and told to dog my route.

All of this means that a stranger in Birmingham or London or Glasgow is an accident looking for somewhere to happen. This is why many of the people driving in cities seem to be deformed. Their chins are on top of the steering wheel, their heads are at right angles to their necks and their eyes, which have a frantic appearance, are locked in the top of their eye

They are searching, upwards, for a slue, any clue, as to where they might be. Suddenly ... bang! They have run into the car in front. The car in front is stationary. Its driver is nowhere to be seen. Ah yes, there he is, holding an A to Z in front of a pedestrian who turns out to be a Belgian tourist.

I know, strangers are a damned nuisance. But we are all strangers somewhere at some time, so can we have larger direction signs, better street signs, more district signs? Surely that would be easier than

levels brought on by travelling for too long without eating.

Vehicles are better designed than ever. And people spend fortunes maintaining them," says the inspector. "But the one thing that they fail to maintain is themselves." The inspector developed the pilot scheme of MoT-style checks with his wife Christine, a nursing resource manager

NHS Trust. The couple believe that their holiday campaign, Fit to Drive — Arrive Alive, could be the model for police forces throughout the country to use all the year round.

Drivers arriving at Exeter Services on the M5 in Devon were met by a team of specialist nurses from Taunton's Musgrove Park Hospital. Volunteers were weighed, measured and given eyesight tests before being tested for lung function, blood pressure and blood-sugar levels.

"After driving through the night without a meal, his blood sugar level was horrifyingly low," says Christine.

The true terrors of the school run have been exposed by Britain's children, who have come up with their own safedriving code after being asked what most annoys them about their parents' motoring habits.

The most dangerous thing in the view of 700 children aged 7-14 was "putting on make-up. combing hair in the mirror and shaving while driving", clearly a reference to parents who leave things to the last minute in the morning. Not surprisingly. and perhaps pointed out by the younger section of the

The children were questioned by Kwik-Fit, the exhaust and tyre company. and their advice was turned into the 10-point code below, which has been welcomed by police chiefs and road safety campaigners.

Peter Holmes, Kwik-Fit managing director said: "Children are extremely observant and increasingly safety conscious. We hope motorists will take these observations to heart."

Don't put on make-up, comb hair or shave.

SILVER is growing fast as a popular car colour, reflecting the return of the "feelgood factor", according to PHH Vehicle Management Services. PHH says red and blue cars account for 25 per cent cach of the total, but silver is growing fastest, up 150 per cent on last year. A colour psychologist claims silver is associated with drivers who enjoy their status.

AUDI prices are up by an average 1.75 per cent. The newly launched A3 coupe is unaffected, which means the range starts at £13,795 for an A3 1.6 and tops out at £53,803 for the AS 4.2 quattro Sport. The cabriolet range gains a new 2.8 version, good for 174bhp and 136mph. Price £29,995.

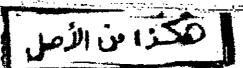

Minors go for Minis More British drivers had Minis as their first car than any other.

But not for him the Mini, a humble Escort or trundling Skoda: friends say that the BBC2 Top Gear presenter. famous for his opinionated road tests. has bought himself a Ferrari F355, all E92,000 worth, to sit in the drive alongside his beloved Jaguar and Volvo.

The Ka: not for people in grey suits

amara Beckwith, now she would look just great in one, but she already owns a Jeep. Sharron Davies looked a bit too tall for its dimensions, but Kyran Bracken was the right height, though his lime-green shirt would probably clash with the paintwork, writes Kevin Eason.

I went to see the car — in fact, the Ka — and ended up playing spot-the-celebrity. Ten minutes in, I was wishing I spent more time in front of the television because I couldn't put a face to a name, except to register that there were more beautiful women crammed into one restaurant in one funchtime than I reasonably get to see in a year.

You see, Ford decided that the Ka is not just a Ka — sorry — car. It is a statement of style for the Nineties, a vehicle for people with an "attitudinal mindset", according to Ian McAllister, Ford of Britain's chairman.

f the invitation had explained this, the grey suit would have been back in the wardrobe. As it was, I was standing there clutching my champagne glass looking more like an accountant than style guru. Maybe Ford thought some style would rub off on me if I stood long enough in the shadow of the beautiful people.

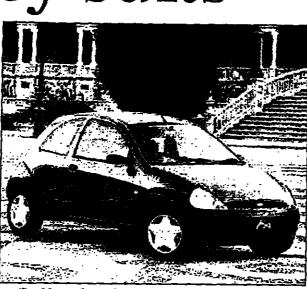

No chance. I would have loved to ask Ms Davies, athletic but languid presenter of Channel 4's Big Breakfast, about her attitudinal mindset but she was busy having her picture taken. Ms Beckwith — a stunning blonde apparition apparently famous without any ostensible reason, except that she is tantalisingly wealthy, deeply gorgeous and what we journalists call a "wild child" — looked unapproachable. All I had to offer was a grey suit, an overdraft and an attitudinal mindset, so I gave her a body swerve and scoured the celebrity guest list for someone a little less glamorous to chat to. That shirt on Bracken, rugby union scrum half and all-round cutie pie, was too intimidating. Katrina Skepper perhaps, except I had no idea who she was. Or Sarah Cracknell? Umm. still clueless on the identity front. Ha! One I knew: Boy George!

FORD KA

Engine: Four-cylinder 1.3 litre Endura-E (60PS) through five-speed manual gearbox, driving front wheels. Dimensions: three-door car, length 3620 millimetres; width 1631mm; wheelbase 2448mm. Boot-space 186 litres, 205 with rear seats folded.

Performance: 0 to 60mph in 13.8 seconds (14.3 for power-steering version), top speed 96mph, fuel consumption: 47.9mpg average (42.2mpg power-steering version).

Equipment: driver's airbag, seatbelt grabbers, heightadjustable seatbelts, tailgate wash-wipe, tinted glass, engine immobiliser, lights-on warning buzzer. Options include power steering and compact disc player.

Price: to be announced October, probably £7,500.

release and a pint of Guinness, not style. Then came a shock. Buried deep among the crowds packed into Mezzo's, the ultra chic Conran restaurant in London's Soho, was the Ka. Low, curvy, colourful — a sight for eyes sagging under the bombardment of human pulchritude.

No wonder Ford was making a fuss. The car, as in Ka, has the curved silhouette of a Beckwith eyebrow, the angular leanness of a Sharron Davies, the squat, muscular stance of Bracken at the back of a ruck. For once, a carmaker actually made something which looks exciting. Fritz Mayhew, Ford's obviously brave design director, let the youngest members of his team loose on ideas for a tiny city car; more surprisingly, he car; more surprisingly, he liked what they came up with. Two years after Mayhew's approval, it will be in British showrooms — probably priced about £7,500 — the smallest Ford since the Model T and the first of the next generation

a is not actually that small: nearly two feet longer than a Mini though eight inches shorter than the Fiesta it is based on. There is no technological leap forward either, the power coming from an existing 1.3-litre four-cylinder engine and five-speed gearbox, so top speed is only just over 90mph. Füel consumption could average 48 miles to the gallon of unleaded, and the car has a tight turning circle - two features which should appeal to motoring commuters.

There is, however, a revolution in the showroom: forget all that agonising over all the engine sizes, model designations, options and extras; Ka has one engine, one interior, ten colours and two models— Ka and Ka2, which gets power steering, central locking and a posher stereo. Anything else you want, you have to order. No reason why you should though, because Ka comes with the features you need, from a security system to a radio-cassette as good as any.

What you do get as standard is style; great curved lumps of it so cute that Ka will overnight make most other small cars look as conservative as one of John Major's ties.

Just one problem though—that name. Mayhew says everybody likes it and Ka makes a nice graphic image. But how do you say it? Ka, with a vowel sound as in apple or bath (for those of us born on the right side of Watford Gap), or Ka as in bar or ... well, car.

Who cares? When the car looks that sweet, it ceases to be an issue. Anyway, Tamara doesn't care because she has too much style to worry about tiddly little things like that. So if I don't care, does that mean I got style too? Maybe not. Back to the grey suit.

Feisty Fiesta: the Ka's chassis is strengthened at key points to absorb crash impact, with beefier side-impact bars, engine compartment spars, cabin bulkhead and pillars.

Airbags are larger and the seatbelts and engine mounts modified

Surviving bad head-on collision countries on the cabin remainificated and the nose of the corushing in a controlled, progressive way to reduce the longe impact force.

But in front-engined can the engine and gearbox for a solid, relatively uncrushab lump. So the longer the not structure the better; shorter ing the bonnet length, as K does out of a standard Flest structure, creates problems.

La has only one choice dengine because fitting: larger one would take up vita crush length, already reduced to only 7.9 inches, roughly half as much as in the Fiesta.

The front cross member above the radiator is changer to help absorb crash energy. So are the side members running each side of the engine compartment. The structure connecting them to each windscreen pillar is much stronger so that crash force is resisted by the pillars. The bulkhead between the engine and cabin is strengthened to prevent the instrument panel moving too far backwards in a crash.

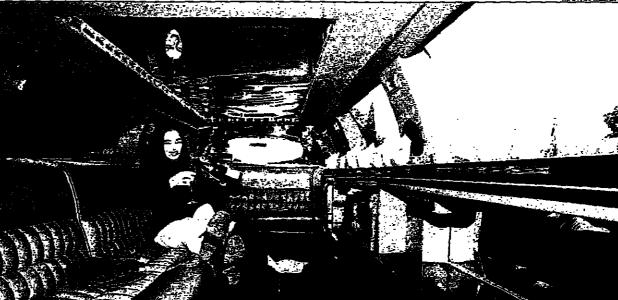

In a full-frontal crash, modified engine-carrying mounts allow the engine and transmission to move backwards as much as possible unimpeded. But in a partial collision, corner to corner, a mount breaks to allow the engine to swing out of the way.

I is doors, hin longer than the three-door Fiesta, are strengthened to help resist side impact. To help the cabin resist crushing, the centre tunnel in the floor is stiffened with extra bracing. The middle roof pillars are also made stronger and there are changes at the back of the car to improve rear impact absorption. The standard equipment driver's air bag is 50 per cent larger and the optional passenger bag is longer, because the passenger sits further back. There are no seat belt tensioners. Seat belts are allowed to stretch 40 per cent more than in the Fiesta. Ford claims these changes make Ka at least as safe in crash absorption as the Fiesta and the best of the Fiesta's rivals - no mean achievement in such a shortened car.

The long, long drive that Joe Average just loves to take

The Californian-built Lincoln Super Stretch is as long as two Rolls-Royces and carries 14 people. The outside is lit by neon at night, while inside has ample space for two televisions, a video machine, sound system, and triple decanters

and finds that it's not just celebrities who go for the luxury life

riving it is like trying to park the Queen Mary in a duckpond: 35ft of long, long, limousine was not built for the sidestreets and tricky short cuts of British towns and cities. When lan Berne drives what is thought to be the longest car in the country, he has to plan ahead to avoid corners simply too right for a machine the length of two Rolls-Royces.

Calfornian-made vehicle — which can carry 14 — would promote a

Thew fashion: limo-lounging.

After giving up classic car sales during the recession. Berne turned to mini-cabbing and noticed a rise in the number and size of the limos cruising London's streets. "It used to be quite rare to see them," he says. "But more and more people seemed to want to travel in style, so I decided to buy one." That was just the start, and by the time that his fourth stretch limo was due for replacement, an importer told him of the Lincoln Super Stretch.

of the Lincoln Super Stretch.
"I went to have a look, liked what I saw, we talked money and I bought it," recalls Berne. "It was completely spur-of-the-moment and I can still hardly believe it."

and I can still hardly believe it.

The one-off custom made V8engined car is barely a year old.
The interior has ample space for two televisions, a video machine, sound system, triple decanter, 16 champage flutes and dozens of whisky tumblers — as well as enough space for a football team, enough space for a football team, their manager and two substitutes.

The designers might have had lovers of luxury in mind but clearly they did not worry about tight

British corners. Getting out of Berne's driveway involved a three-point turn, incorporating part of the pavement and holding up half a dozen other vehicles. Drivers carrying more than eight passengers should hold Public Service Vehicle licences, and without experience in heavy goods vehicles this elegant white monster would be as hard to handle as a truck.

Cruising wide, traffic-free roads is just like being in any other car, until you look back and realise the boot is several steps away and binoculars might be needed to see out of the rear window, Roundabouts did not present any proh-

lems, not the large ones anyway, but mini-roundabouts have to be virtually ignored, while turning into anything even resembling a tight corner means hijacking the

But the car's tunable suspension makes travelling in the Super Stretch feel more comfortable on the road than it looks. Yes, it is guaranteed to attract attention: Berne has seen taxis driven onto central reservations by cabbies distracted by a car which appears and then goes on and on to negotiate the narrower reaches of Britain's streets.

"We can take people into town,
but not down any side-roads;
Regent Street and Oxford Street are but not down any stor-roads; Regent Street and Ordord Street are fine," he says. He is happy to take customers anywhere at anytime for anything, but usually has to plan the route. "Obviously there are roads you simply cannot get down in this car," he says. "And we would not try."

Valued at between £80,000 and £100,000, with insurance costing around £2,000-a-year it is easy to understand why — a scrape down the side of this car could wipe out

In its first few weeks of life, the 4½ tonne right-hand-drive car has carried a number of wedding parties and anniversary couples. "Some do like to get quite amorous at the back," Berne says, demonstrating the visor which cuts driver off from all sights and sounds in the gigantic passenger compartment. "All we ask is that they keep the

a film star for a night. When I'm asked who's in the back people often don't believe it when I say no one famous."

Business is mainly at night, for between £75 and £100 per hour plus VAT. That includes intercom access to the driver and the fibre-optic ceiling lights which change from yellow, to blue, to purple, to pink. The exterior is also covered in neon lighting. "It looks spectacular at night. If you want to be seen in town, this is the car to do it in,"

Berne says.

With seating room to lie back comfortably, gaze out of the one-way windows and sip champagne, it is hard to imagine a more desireable way to travel.

Tony Dawe reports on British team successes at a unique classic race around the streets of Copenhage:

in an occasion reminiscent of the great races held in cities like Paris between the wars, Alfa Romeos, Bentleys and MGs battled for supremacy on a tight circuit above the canals and in Iront of the parliament building .

Porsches and Ferraris competed in later classes, while elegant American sedans joined in the event which was held only after concerted lobbying by car enthusiasts, politicians and even Denmark's crown prince.

to straw bales surrounding the circuit on Friday night. The course was later fenced off for the races and the 6,000 tickets sold out quickly.

or the first time in decades, the streets of a major European capital echoed to the More modern Jaguars.

Their success in persuading the city fathers to agree to close the streets for the weekend was surprising, given the country's lack of motor racing tradition. Denmark is not on the grand prix circuit, is not renowned for famous drivers and boasts only one modest

In Copenhagen last weekend there were no protests. only some vandalism which saw a group of youths set fire

The event was well supported by the British, with a successful team entered by the Mulberry design company. Two of its members. Foster and Paul Grist, produced the best racing of the day while Roger Saul, the team leader and Mulberry founder, took third place in his class despite unfamiliar Jaguar D type. The cars driven by Foster and Grist reflected the charm of the event. Foster was in a 1948 Gordini T15, driven by Juan Fangio to win his first European race and one of the smallest grand prix cars built: Grist was at the wheel of an awesome Alfa Romeo eightcylinder twin-supercharged Tipo 35, built in the late 1930s to combat the emerging might of Mercedes and Auto Union.

The 90hp Gordini appeared to have no chance against the 2900cc Alfa but the tight circuit gave the little blue racer an advantage and it started its

Paul Grist racing an awesome 1930s Alfa Romeo twin-supercharged, 2,900cc Tipo 35. Despite a massive power advantage, he lost two thrilling duels with team mate John Foster's 90hp, 1948 Gordini T15

Alfa just behind. Foster held on to his position throughout the first race but Grist made a flying start in the second and the first bend.

"I was surprised but not worried," Foster said later. "I kept on his tail and as we started to lap other entrants, I saw my chance. As we came to the hairpin, Paul had to decide whether to follow the car in front round the corner or to head me off by taking the inside route. He went inside but the Alfa was too big and hit the hay bales on the far side

Foster went on to win, but Grist reversed out and recovered to take second place. "I was proud of their performance and delighted by the class in pole position with the excitement they gave the crowd," said Saul, who had hand-picked the two men to join the Mulberry team. Foster, a farmer-cum-entrepreneur from Fife, is well-known on the classic car circuit and Grist, a former television actor, now runs the Traction Seabert classic car restoration business in Hertfordshire.

The most spectacular sound of the day came from another Briton. The crackling roar from Barry Foster's 1931 MG Monthlery C Compressor let everyone at the track know how successfully he was performing. He drove the 65-yearold racer spectacularly but had to settle for second place behind Jan Unneberg's 1934 MG N-Special Magnette.

"The sound from the four-cylinder engine was first described in the Thirties as like tearing calico," said Foster. His friend and fellow enthusiast, Hamish McNinch. fared less well in the same race as the half-shaft on his 1935 MG PA sheared. As soon as the car had been towed back into the paddock. the two men got up to their elbows in grease to strip the MG and replace the damaged part. They worked so speedily that the car was back for the final parade and the two men were also able to appear spotless at the prize-giving dinner in the Royal Armoury.

There, the Mulberry team and Barry Foster were joined by other successful Britons, including Grahame Bryant who won a 1960s class in his

THE CLINCHING factor in persuading the authorities in Copenhagen to stage the Classic Car Cup in the city centre proved to be the city's nomination this year as Cultural Capital of Europe.

"I was able to convince them that the motor car is just as important to our heritage as the arts and crafts featured in other events," said Ole Sommer, the organiser and Denmark's leading classic car enthusiast.

Restoration programmes, environmental initiatives and the opening of a modern art museum have marked the year, but for many the car cup was the

f you like grey, you'll love the new Skoda. The entire grey spectrum, from thundercloud to charcoal, through pearl, frost, lead, smoke, salt and fluffy cloud, is explored on the interior of the all-new Skoda Octavia.

Which is a shame, because that might be enough to deter non-grey fans from a car that in most other respects sparkles, especially in the critical value-for-money equation. For this is basically a VW or Audi for a fraction of the cost.

Take a dash of trend-setting VW Golf, add a sprinkling of upmarket Audi A3, and gar-nish with a touch of sensible Seat Toledo, and the result, under a Czech-designed but very European smooth and curvy five-door hatchback shape, is the Octavia. The car draws on parts from across the VW automotive empire. VW have pumped £3 billion into Skoda since taking control, and £800 million of that has gone on the brand new Octavia factory outside Prague. The result is a car that draws deeply on VW's stan-dards for engineering quality. while taking a wide detour around the German firm's usual pricing policies.

Taking suspension, exhaust systems, engines and cabin section from the VW Golf. Audi and Seat cars, the Octavia is more than 50 per cent Golf/Audi/Seat. But while the Golf five door is priced at up to £20,000, and the Seat Toledo from £12,000 to £17,300, the Octavia will cost from £10,500 to £15,000 at today's prices.

It's only half Czech, but will the badge deter buyers?

SKODA OCTAVIA SLX

Model: Skoda Octavia SLX five-door hatchback saloon. Engine: 1.8 litre 20 valve four-cylinder petrol, giving 125bhp at 6000rpm through the front wheels with five speed manual gearbox.

Performance: 0-62mph in 10.9 seconds with a top speed of L25mph. Economy: 23.2mpg in town, 43.5mpg out of town, 32.8mpg average.

Equipment: Dual front airbags, front and rear electric windows, power steering, power glass sunroof, coordinated retractable seatbelt systems, cargo area cover, aluminium alloy wheels, optional air conditioning. Price: £15,000

Skoda's aim is to do for value-conscious drivers what the Beetle-only VW firm did for them 30 years ago, and to supply excellently engineered but budget-conscious cars.

The Octavia, a Mondeosized five-door saloon and estate, will compete with lowprice cars from Daewoo, Proton, and Hyundai, as well as the Neon from Chrysler and the Mitsubishi Carisma.

Skoda UK managing director Dermot Kelly explains: "The car will be priced to compete with the Koreans, but will have the handling, ride and quality of German car technology. If Ford and Vauxhall are the Tesco and Sainsburys of the car world, then we are the Spar." While maintaining their commitment to low prices, Skoda has been working to bury its joke status, helped by customer satisfaction surveys from Skoda Felicia owners that for the past two years have made Skoda the highestrated European brand. The Octavia can only help Skoda's regeneration. It brings with it Skoda's first 20valve engine (taken from Audi), their first turbo-diesel (usually seen in the Golf), and the first Skoda automatic. All models feature power steering and the Octavia will be the first car in its class to be fitted with side airbags for extra passenger protection.

eadroom and legroom in the front are ample for even those over 6ft 4ins, and in the back there is more than enough headroom. However, the cost for the gigantic boot is reduced legroom for rear seat assengers. The 1.8-litre 20-valve petrol is smoothness and light; comfortable and easy to drive, if let down by engine boom on the motorway. The diesel-engined car settles to a quiet life after a rattly start-up, though wind noise at motorway speeds is for some reason more noticeable than on the identicallybodied petrol car.

Given that so much of the Octavia has been adapted from the VW/Audi/Seat parts bin, why then should anyone pay more for the closely relat-ed cars in the VW stable rather than opting instead for the cheaper Skoda? Unless, of course, it's down to badge

Skoda's confidence in the car is reflected in a ten-year anti-corrosion warranty on the fully galvanized body, plus a three-year paintwork guarantee. Although the car will not be launched in the UK for another 18 months, it will take the starring role on the Skoda stand at next month's

In hindsight, Vaughan Freeman explains how not to buy a beautiful — but dodgy — old car

t was the most beautiful of cars, a gorgeous Jaguar Mark II that usually smelt of leather and wood, except when you filled it up - then it recked of the petrol pouring from the perforated tank.

Owning a Mark II, the riginal "blagger's Jag" beluved of 1960s bank robbers and Inspector Morse, was my one and only foray into classic car ownership. Swept away by the car's looks, £5,000 was paid for a car that lingers in the memory for its looks, and its repeated and costly trips to the garage.

Like thousands of other would-be classic owners who, come summer, swap cheques for automotive heartache, all it took to convince me that money and car should be exchanged, was a misty-cyed look and a test drive at night.

The petrol tank problem was revealed on our first long drive. The rank was built from two halves, riveted together alone the midriff: all very well until rust takes hold of the rivets. Returning to the car after topping the tank for the first time, it was found sitting in a pool of petrol. A mere £900 later, the car had a leakproof tank. The bank account had started not so much leaking as haemorrhaging.

The Jaguar only had seatbelts in the front, which meant that our new baby daughter, Emily, had to go in the front, while wife Muriel sat unrestrained in the back. Having bought the car in the winter, another drawback, the non-existent Mark II heating, became apparent Driving required pilot and passengers to wear full skiing gear to avoid hypothermia. While Summer solved the cold problem, another arose, since clearly the petrol pump hated the warmer weather. though an adroit whack could sometimes ease the problem. More money was spent on the petrol pump, and more still on the handbrake. An outbreak of rust along the bottom of the a second child and redundancy, hastened the car's inevitable sale, but only after more money had been spent to stop the spreading tin worm. topped with a partial respray.

The AA suys thousands fall prey to classic car madness every year. Its files bulge with examples of classic dreams turned nightmare.

Head of AA Vehicle Inspections Stephen Small says. Between 60 and 70 per cent of the classic cars we see are in such poor condition that repair work to restore them to roadworthiness would cost a smali fortune.

"The electronic paint-depth guage really comes into its own when inspecting classic cars. Much of the appalling restoration work is down to ignorance, yet the lengths some bad restorers will go to to disguise rotten bodywork even using spray-painted strips of newspaper — is horrifying.

So how can a would-be classic buyer minimise possible catastrophe? The AA advises that any car be examined by an expert to spot potential problems, and that such a car is not bought as the prime source of transport, since reliability is still a relatively modern concept.

By paying as much as you can afford initially for the best condition car, you could save major bills, rather than following the alternative of buying a cheaper car and hoping to put it right later on.

So, is classic car ownership worthwhile? Of course. The Jaguar is now gone, safe in the hands of an equally barmy and masochistic classic car loving friend, but the photographs of it sit snugly next to the children's, and the memories are fond. Now, if you'll excuse me while I flick ing. There is some good news. through the For Sale pages of

USED CAR BRIEF

To be driven on the Riviers, with Grace Kelly at the wheel and Cary Grant by her side, the XIS is all about gismour. Leunched in the water of an oil crisis, omens were not good for the thirsty XIS which had to fill the shoes of the E-type that had died the year, before. Ortics said it had been designed by team of three and they weren't talking to each other. "Two decades later the XIS is still going strong, but will be phased out when the XIG goes on sale this year. Top of its class for the school run ong before the school run became an institution, we , suburban children used to go to school on a thing called a bus. They can still be seen occasionally in some parts of the country. From the first day of the first term, we used to light to get on top rather than suffer the indignity of "inside". In later years there might have been a point to this scramble, the upstairs of a bus was a safe place for a crafty drag on an illicit cigarette or to chat up girls from the neighbouring school. But in earlier years it was just for the sheer pleasure of looking down on the rest of the world.

Such childish instincts obviously endure through generations. Now that the school run has become a ritual, the thing to be seen in at the gates is a people carrier or, even better, a 4x4; vehicles from which young passengers can gaze down on mere mortals whose parents still use a saloon.

Perhaps children have a greater influence on car buying than many of us would like to admit, in some places the rush hour seems to consist almost entirely of such vehicles.

It's no surprise then that the prize in The Times's recent "back to school" competition was a Jeep Cherokee, exactly the kind of vehicle from which a modern child can enjoy looking down. The Cherokee Sport is an unashamed "cheap Jeep". With its choice of 2.5 or 4.0-litre petrol engines and an interior equipment level that is adequate rather than luxurious at least compared to its leather-clad, all-electric, all-singing, all-dancing big brother, the Grand Cherokee the Sport is designed as a value-formoney package that provides a fullsize four-wheel-drive at a price designed to undercut the competition. Not that the car is spartan, the 4litre Sport that I drove comes with automatic transmission, anti-lock brakes, power-assisted steering, remote door locking and a driver's-side airbag. The windows are electrically operated all round and so are the door mirrors.

The Sport is fitted also with the Selec-Trac transmission system that offers two-wheel-drive or full-time four-wheel-drive for road use and part-time four-wheel-drive in high and low ranges for off-road use. This is a well-tried system and more flexible than some, but I wonder just how many people who buy these vehicles ever use this facility. It is estimated that no more than ten per cent of all 4x4 vehicles sold in this country ever go anywhere where the choice of off-road drive is required.

eep recognise this, and they also recognise the influence of children on the purchase of these cars, putting great stress on the safety features, the side-impact protection system and the all-round visibility. Since the Cherokee was introduced here in 1993, around 17,000 of the various versions have been sold in this country.

I had driven various Cherokees before but mainly off-road, where I had been impressed by their performance on some very tough courses built to test their capabilities. That sort of driving in the right conditions is great fun, so I was interested to see how this vehicle would handle on the road, especially around town. The moment you hit your first traffic jam in a vehicle like this you realise that there's a lot to be said for looking down on the world. Having a driving position high enough to see

Engine: four-litre, six-cylinder producing 184bhp at 4750rpm and 222Ibs/ft torque at 3000rpm.

the cause of the hold-up is somehow reassuring and often takes the sting out of sitting in a queue. The automatic, of course, takes a lot of the effort out of town driving and proved smooth enough in even the most jerky of slow-moving traffic. But I was disappointed with the power steering: at really low speeds it felt heavier than I expected and made parking in a small space an unnecessary challenge, although perhaps a bit of elbow work is a small price to pay for a vehicle that can keep several children entertained.

As a practical family transport the Cherokee has several advantages, the cabin is roomy and the load area behind the rear seats, despite the intrusion of the upright spare wheel, can take at least as much luggage as most of the estate cars which might be alternative buys and more than most MPVs when the seats are in place. Despite the car's height, the flat floor makes it easy to load and ut it was out of town where I warmed to this vehicle. The big engine makes for relaxed motorway cruising and there is not as much wind noise as I feared in such a high car. On country roads the well-controlled amount of body roll enables confident cornering, and the the driver's position makes overtaking easier.

Reliability is a must for any schoolrun vehicle, and on that score the Cherokee stands up well against its rivals. Although imported here only for the last three years, it is essentially an old design and has been running around the United States for long enough to have any problems sorted. For reassurance it also comes with a three-year/60,000-mile warranty and a one-year roadside assistance deal which is valid across Europe.

I want to buy a used car. With all those people having coughed up for P-platers, there must be a lot of part-exchange bargains around.

A it sounds good doesn't it, but it's not that simple. P-plate sales mean a lot of clean, recent, privately-owned cars are on the market, but not enough

But I read last year that this was the best time to buy. So what on earth has happened?

A Last year and the year before a lot of very recent ex-rental and leasing cars flooded on to the market as the companies replenished fleets with new registration models. Manuacturers are now taking a much firmer hand in controlling that process.

O Does that mean used-car prices are higher now than they were at this time last year?

A I'm afraid it's the law of supply and de-mand. Fewer cars on the market means better prices for those on offer.

So where and bargain? I don't want So where can I find a to end up with some highmileage thrashed motor.

Funny you should say that. Mileage is one of the factors that might indicate a bargain these days. A rep's car may get a lot of use but it is also likely to have been properly maintained. A good Mondeo, Cavalier or equivalent Rover with a full-service history is likely to provide you with years of reliable motoring.

O Does that apply to larger cars too? I could do with the legroom.

Mass-produced executive cars like the Fori Scorpio, Rover 800 and Vauxhall Omega depreciat quickly in the first year, s N-plate versions are attractive; older models like the Senator and Granada are real bargains in terms o space for cash. The other area where you might find a bargain is the quality sector with ex-fleet BMWs offering exceilent value.

Can I get a bargain if I go to an auction? I hear that's where a lot of fleet sales are made.

A If you know exactly what you want, go carly, take a good look at the car and make sure you get a look at its service history, then you might find a bargain at auction. But take great care to do your homework, fix a reasonable s price in your mind and remember not to get carried away in the heat of the auction-room bidding.

If I stick to a dealer what are the golden rules to remember?

A Decide exactly what you want and set yourself a budget. Always check the car's papers (HPI on 01722-422422 will run an identity check on the vehicle for you). If you want a car inspected, ask the AA, on 0345 500610 or RAC 0800 333660. Always take a test drive of at least 20 minutes.

And where can I get information about used-car prices?

There are a number of price guides on the market. One of the easiest to use is The Book which includes a guide to running costs as well as prices and road test verdicts from What Car? For further information: 0181 943 5044.

STORAGE SYSTEMS LIMITED

It's a FACT, if you do not protect your car when not in use, it can deteriorate faster than if were driven every day.

How many times have you returned to your classic after only a few weeks to find it's not quite the same car you remember?-Maybe it won't start, or the exhaust sounds noisy, the brakes squeal or, worse still, your brakes have seized. THE CULPRIT IS CONDENSATION

Just think what this condensation is doing to the parts of the car you cannot see. How much damage is caused by condensation inside panels and cavities is obvious to the professional or the enthusiast who has spent time restoring these rusty cars, but of cause, by the time you can see signs of damage, it's already too late

Have you ever noticed that stale smell from the interior of your car? Cotton, wool, leather and wood will all rot within a very time if you allow them to get wet and that smell is telling you that your interior is wet

THE ANSWER. Isolate the vehicle from it's surrounding environment (i.e put it in a carcoon) and already you have started to protect it from sudden changes in air temperature (the root cause of condensation). The air temperature inside the carcoon is now kept much closer to that of the enclosed vehicle and a fine balance of the change in now kept much closer to that of the enchosed vehicle and a the category in temperature is achieved by slowly changing the air inside the carcoon approximately once every 20 minutes. This constant flow of freshly filtered air passing over and through the vehicle will collect mosture from inside the carcoon (if the vehicle is wet) and expel it via the Carcoon sventilating system, thus keeping the enclosed vehicle protected, fresh and dry!

My radio is permanently tuned to Radio 4, although I have also tried Talk Radio in the past, Radio 3 gets an airing on early mornings if I have a long drive. I take loads of comedy tapes with me - Hancock and the Navy Lark, and full-length operas as I travel on my own a lot.

What is the most unusual thing you have ever done in your car?

I once relieved myself of a seriously full bladder while stuck in traffic in America, I was on a multi-lane freeway and I couldn't hold on any longer. I had four large bottles of Gatorade in a cool box, so I emptied them out of the window and filled three while smiling sweetly at the drivers in the cars around me. Green hunt is on for Porsche's electric shocker

Ian Morton joins the search for an old contraption which made no concessions to the carriagelike idea whose time may finally have come elegance expected of the automobile of the 1890s. The creation of a virtually unknown electrical engirecognise as having huge potential

As Porsche approaches the centenary of its founding father's early efforts for the Viennese carmaker Jakob Lohner, its archivists are urgently seeking information on the Paris car's fate.

They know it was a four-wheel drive development of an even earlier design in which only the front wheels were powered.

And they know that it was sold on September 6, 1900, to E.W. Hart, Esq. aus Luton in England" for 15,000 French francs

Electric cars were the great hope at the end of the 19th century, but Porsche's monster was different. Instead of a 'proper' transmission carried a 2.5 PD electric motor in each wheel. Porsche also developed a "mixte" or hybrid system whereby the power for the hub motors was generated primarily by a small petrol engine.

Porsche's employer Lohner dropped both battery and hybrid systems when it became apparent that neither would stand up commercially against internal combustion and in 1906 sold the hubmotor and hybrid patents. The hub-motors concept made it to into space in 1971 when it was used on NASA's moon buggy. The hybrid principle's potential for low-pollution motoring is now recognised.

Porsche is involved in some of these projects, though is bound not to divulge which. And now the company is delving down to its deepest roots to register its claim to seminal involvement with this rediscovered innovation.

AN EXCLUSIVE COMPETITION

HOW TO ENTER

The Times, in association with The Sunday Times and the Royal Mail, is celebrating the 100th anniversary of the British motor industry by giving readers the chance to win one of the following five cars: Triumph TR3A, 1960
 MG TC, 1949
 Morgan Plus Four

Austin Healey 100/4, 1954
 Jaguar XK 120, 1948

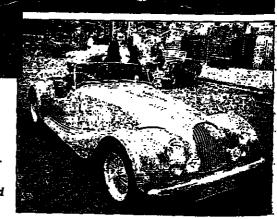

PLUS, every reader of The Times and The Sunday Times entering our competition can receive an exclusive, limited-edition First Day Cover, with details of five classic marques of postwar sports cars, free of charge.

• If you are a Times reader you can enter by sending the completed form, below, with seven differently-numbered tokens from The Times together with the token in The Sunday Times tomorrow. Readers of The Sunday Times can enter by sending the form with the tokens printed last Sunday and tomorrow with three differently-numbered tokens from The Times.

The cars given as prizes will be of the same marque but not necessarily the same model as those used in the Royal Mail stamps or the photographs, shown here. The prizes include delivery anywhere in the British Isles. Each car will be in good order, with a new MOT certificate and will have been inspected by an experienced mechanic

FREE limited-edition first day covers

The first day cover, pictured right, has been produced by the Royal Mail exclusively for Times Newspapers. It features five stamps which will be launched on Tuesday, October 1, ranging in denominations from 20p to 63p. Royal Mail decided to mark British motoring's celebration of two centenaries this year with a set of five special stamps. The first event of 100 years ago was the Locomotives on Highways Act 1896 which allowed the Local Government Board to raise the speed limit for cars from 4mph to 12mph. The British motor industry also began in 1896 with the registration of Daimler to manufacture Britishbuilt cars in Coventry.

 Presentation packs, first day covers, postcards, and the Classic Sports Car stamps are available by post from the British Philatelic Bureau: call 0345 641 641 (Monday to Friday); and most Post Offices — for more details call 0345 22 33 44. First day covers are also available from BPCPA: 0181 886 6744

The sale of the extraordi- total for the cars, including 37 Stutzes, and related spares to more than two million dollars. Every lot was sold and the final value of bids reached £1,398,541.

Top price of E110,720 was paid for a 1916 Stutz Model 4C Bearcat. closely followed by £107,200 for a 1933 Stutz DV32 Roadster and £96,640 for a 1930 Stutz Eight supercharged coupé. The best non-Stutz was a 1926 Rolls-Royce Silver Ghost Picadilly Roadster which went for £82,560.

Malcolm Welford, Christie's expert said: "The great attraction was that these cars were all in original condition. The Rolls-Royce, for example, was virtually untouched and all the Stutzes were unrestored. The interest in the vast amount of spares and automobilia that Miller had accumulated was enormous. One very mixed lot, described simply as remaining contents of Shed I' sold for $9,200 against a top estimate of just $500. People were attracted by the extraordinary story behind this collection." On the first day of the sale Christie's also held their annual auction at the Beaulieu Autojumble at the National Motor Museum. Highest price there was £100,500 for a 1928 42-litre Bentley which had been in the same ownership since 1939 and had been completely restored in the 1960s.

Most striking prices, however, were those fetched by two 1970s open Mercedes-Benzes from the estate of Mrs Olivia Wright, who lived in Oxfordshire and died earlier this year. She obviously enjoyed some stylish and sporty motoring since the two cars shared garage space with a drophead Rolls-Royce and a Ford Mustang. A 1970 280SE Cabriolet estimated at £15-£20,000 fetched £34,500 and a 2.8-litre "Pagoda top" 280SL convertible from 1971 fetched £20,700 against an estimate of £8-£12,000. "It shows that people are prepared to pay very good prices for such well-engineered cars even when they are comparatively recent."

said Welford. Next weekend, Brooks will be selling a rare piece of Yorkshire motoring history at the Great Yorkshire Showground in Harro-gate. A Bradford-built 1930 Jowett Grey Knight saloon which has been owned for the last 17 years by Michael Koch-Osborne, grandson of the much-lamented company's founder, is estimated at £6-£7,000.

This Rolls-Royce Silver Ghost Picadilly was sold for £82,560

is that luggage space suffers as the passengers pile in. It features five seats, huge headroom thanks to the very tall roofline, and enough room between the rear seat and the full-length rear hatch for 300kg of payload.

The main drawback is that apart from the rear hatch there are only the driver and front passenger doors; rear seat passengers have to scramble into the back, not ideal for an arthritic older person or for parents struggling to clunkclick children into the rear.

Citroën communications director Bernard Guerreau says: The Berlingo Multispace is a car for all countries, including England, and the car will be launched in England by early next year. It is not an Espace or an Evasion. It is smaller, and very cheap. In France it younger passengers in mind. Most interesting of the three is the Bubble Saloon, which looks as if somebody has inflated a Nissan Micra to near bursting point. The pumpkin-shaped Bubble is about as round as a car can get without rolling away. The result inside though is metres of head and leg room, front and back for even the tallest of the five passengers in a voluminous interior.

'ill the three make it into production though? Citroen and other manufacturers believe Europe. where 75 per cent of new cars are saloons, will follow America where only 60 per cent are saloons and the rest a mix of off-roaders, MPVs and pickups. In Europe, such alterna-tive vehicles had only 10 per cent of the new car market in 1985, compared to 15 per cent now and a predicted 20 per cent by 2005.

Which is where Berlingo come in, says Citroen marketing and planning director Luc practical exploration, an ongoing evaluation allowing us to establish a dialogue with today's car users about what tomorrow's car might look like."
